In the Courts.

A Catapult Shot Costs 4s.

At Hitchin Petty Sessions, Arthur Claridge, labourer, Bendish, was summoned for killing a wild bird in the close season, on April 25, at Whitwell. Defendant pleaded guilty. Police-constable Appleby said he found on Claridge a catapult and a Blackbird which had just been killed. A fine of 4s. was imposed.

A Case Dismissed.

Charles Cornford was charged before the Hastings County Bench, May 7, with ill-treating two Linnets at Fairlight on 17th April, and denied the offence.—Inspector Adams, R.S.P.C.A., said he saw the defendant on the cliffs at Fairlight, with nets placed out for taking wild birds. Between the nets were two Linnets fastened on to two sticks. A fine string was attached to the two sticks. The whole time he was there the birds were struggling to get at liberty. They were terrified and frightened. Cornford showed him the birds, and one of them was quite red, although the skin was not broken. When the nets came over they came right over the decoy birds as well as they birds they caught.—By Mr. Glenister (for the defence): He could not say whether there were benders over the birds to keep the nets off them.—Cornford, on oath, said he had been bird catching for fifteen or sixteen years. During the whole of that time he had employed exactly the same method, but he had never been stopped before. The birds sat on the sticks and the method was to gently raise the stick about a foot, and then let them down, and the other birds followed them down. The birds were trained to sit on the stick. They first began to train birds and put the braces on when they were from six to eight weeks old.—A demonstration was given in Court to show how Linnets were trained to sit on a stick. He had benders to prevent the net falling on the birds. Frank Samuel Kent, a bird catcher, said he had been catching from eighteen to twenty years, and had never been stopped. He used the same method as Cornford. The Bench retired to consider their verdict, and upon their return they said they considered it a case that should be carefully gone into, but they did not find that cruelty was made out, and dismissed it.

OBITUARY.

MR. A. BOTTOMLEY (Bradford).

Fanciers will regret to hear of the death of Mr. A. Bottomley, of Bradford, which occurred on May 14, at the age of 51, writes Mr. W H Symes, Sec. Laisterdyke B.F.A. He died after undergoing an operation for appendicitis. He was a man that was well known and liked among the fancy, having, I believe, kept Canaries for 20 years or more. He has a son in the Fancy, and therefore has someone to take his stock of birds. I am sure that all fanciers who knew Mr. Bottomley will extend their heartfelt sympathy towards his relatives in their sad bereavement.

MR. JOHN BUCHANAN (Stonehouse).

It is with deep regret that I write to inform you of the death of a well-known Hybrid breeder, John Buchanan, Stonehouse, writes Mr. Wm. Melvin. He was a member of Larkhall C.B.S., and although only five years in the Fancy, he had bred 33 Hybrids, Goldfinch-Greenfinch and Redpoll Greenies, one hen Greenie being the mother of 23 herself. He had been in bad health for seven months. Much sympathy is felt for his widowed mother in her sad loss.

Birds in the Firing Line.

A Warrington soldier writes that there are more Skylarks near the firing line than at any place in Lancashire.

The Fly's Natural Enemy.

We have nothing to say in defence of the birds which are more noted for their destructive propensities than for anything else; they must be reduced by all legitimate means. After all, however, they form the exceptions. A good case can be made out for the protection of the majority of species, and on utilitarian grounds, if no other, they ought to be allowed to thrive. Every spring and summer we receive warnings against the danger caused by flies of various kinds carrying germs of infection. We believe that all the measures recommended, on high medical authority, for safeguarding people against infection ought to be adopted; but, whatever may be done by human agency, it remains true that our principal security must be in the birds which prey on our tiny but countless enemies, and in protecting these we shall protect ourselves.

How I Breed My Norwich Canaries.

A paper read by Mr. N. Leese, before the members of the Stoke-on-Trent C.B.A.

As I believe an exchange of opinions and methods is beneficial to everybody, I have pleasure in giving a few items of my system of breeding Norwich Canaries. I cannot claim to have had as many years in the Norwich Fancy as some who are present to-night, but I have bred a large number and with a certain amount of success on the show bench. I take it for granted that, as the season is so far advanced, all the spring cleaning has been completed, and the bird-room and cages are now ready for occupation, so that I will treat with the subject only from this stage.

When I make my arrangements for pairing I run my cocks in show cages, and then look out the hens which I consider will give the best results, always bearing in mind the pedigree of the birds under consideration, for unless you are familiar with the pedigree of your birds you will be breeding in the dark, as the surface value alone is unreliable. However, having decided on the birds I intend to run together, I then give them egg food each morning until the hen has gone to nest and laid her third egg. I then remove the cock, and feed the hen while sitting, with plain canary seed only.

On the night before the eggs are due to hatch I give a little egg (both white and yolk) mixed with ground arrowroot biscuit, and at three days old I replace the biscuit with bread-crumbs and follow up with the egg-food three times a day, 6 a.m., noon, and 6 p.m. I also give green-food, dandelion, and chickweed at mid-day. I supply rape and canary seed in the seed boxes, and I find that by following these lines I can rear the young without any further trouble. I never use hemp at all, as I think my birds are better without it; this, however, is a matter of opinion.

All being well, there will very soon be some young on the sticks ready for caging off. When I have removed the young to suitable quarters I continue the usual egg-food for three or four days, then commence to get them on hard seed, which I leave them to crack for themselves, and, reducing the egg-food, I give them a teaspoonful of bread and milk once a week until ready for colour feeding.

I never omit washing all water-pots with soda-water once a week, as I believe a lot of evil may arise through foul water-pots, and cleanliness is the main thing in keeping young birds in your room instead of in the ash-bin. I also clean my room floor once a week, using Jeyes' Fluid in the water; I think it seems to freshen up the birds as much as it does the room, and tends to keep the birds healthy.

When the birds are about six weeks old, I turn them into large flights for moulting and colour feeding, catching up the likely-looking birds just before completion of the moult and finishing these off in cages, sheeted over. The time spent in the large flight strengthens the birds, helps the moult, and I think they take better to colour food when in company. I always use the bath twice a week; this is also of great benefit all through the season."

"Starving to Death."

Messrs. Spratt's Patent state that a British soldier, a prisoner in Germany, whose name is withheld for prudential reasons, has contrived to get a postcard through to England on which he writes thus:—"I would be very pleased if you would be so kind as to send me a loaf, cake, jam, butter and 7 lbs. of Spratt's biscuits through every week. In the margin of the postcard in fainter pencil are written the words, "I am starving to death."

"Oblige by keeping out my advertisement, as I am sold out, having sold eleven hens and ten cocks in one week. Good old CAGE BIRDS."
—WM. BARR (Cardenden).

"Please state all Birds advertised in CAGE BIRDS are all sold this week."—G. LLOYD (Crewe).

Bird Villains.

By BART KENNEDY.

The renowned "Tramp Author" moralizes on the rascally ways of some birds he has seen on his wanderings.

THE other day I saw a Crow standing in the middle of a field. He had the appearance of a very dark and very aged criminal who was meditating in solitude upon his innumerable crimes. I pretended to fling a stone at him, but he would not move. And I stood and watched him for a while.

In a varied and wandering life I have seen many criminal looking beings. I have seen men whom—if they stood in a dock—a jury would convict on general principle. I have seen beings calculated to give the most stoical the shakes and the shudders. But never have I seen such an appearance of concentrated villainy as my friend, the meditative Crow, embodied. He looked like the essence of black, bedraggled sin. And he was there in the middle of the field, thinking.

Finally I picked up a small stone and flung it at him. He looked like a person who should be moved on. But all he did was to hop a foot or so aside. And I went on my way, wondering why he existed. The landscape could richly afford to do without him.

A Libel on the Rook.

Rooks are often confounded with Crows by the uninitiated, for, though a Rook has a whitish spot at the base of its bill and a crow has not, they look in a general way alike. To call a Rook a Crow is to commit a base libel concerning a decent bird. That they are in any real way related, I find most difficult to believe. The naturalists say that they are of the same family, and I can only remark in this connection that branches of the same family are quite often as different from each other as chalk is from cheese. Both Rook and Crow are black, and both are shaped in the same way. But in character they are poles apart. Rooks are sociable beings who live in colonies. Crows are Ishmaelish bird-ruffians who keep to themselves. The reason of this is doubtless because the other birds find that their room is much better than their company.

If you were to see a Rook and a Crow together you would never afterwards mistake one for the other. The difference, though subtle, is distinct. The Crow wears a predatory, down-at-heel air. He has the appearance of a black pirate who doesn't worry about keeping himself clean.

His language is limited. It is composed of but three words or "caws." Compared with him a Rook has quite an extensive vocabulary. He varies his "caws." Living in community has developed his conversational powers.

Poor Rooks! They are often blamed for the villainies committed by the Crows. My sympathies go out to them, especially when the Rook-pie season comes round.

Intellectual Villainy.

Another bird whose character is of the villainous order is the Cuckoo. The Cuckoo of the female persuasion evades the responsibility of bringing up her young. She usually lays her eggs in the nest of the Hedge-sparrow, a little bird who is the proud possessor of more industry than intelligence. The egg of the Cuckoo, I may say, is very small when you come to consider the size of the bird. Its length is more than double that of the confiding Hedge-sparrow.

This laying of small eggs is, of course, a sign of intellect on the part of the Cuckoo. But, as everyone knows, the possession of intellect by no means entails the possession of goodness. Intellectual people are sometimes villains of a frightful order. The Cuckoo lays these small eggs the more easily to deceive the innocent little Hedge-sparrows who work from dawn to dark, gathering insects for the young villains of Cuckoos at the expense of their own young.

Though the Hedge-sparrow is the usual victim of this wily and unnatural bird, there are, I am sorry to have to remark, others. The Cuckoo will patronise the nest of almost any bird, though it prefers the nests of those that are insectivorous. It knows that a diet of insects is the best for the favourable development of the baby Cuckoos.

Whenever I hear the song of the Cuckoo I am moved to righteous wrath. The notes are beautiful and tender. It is hard to believe that such sounds could come from the throat of so despicable a character. It is true that the male bird does not commit the actual crime of laying the eggs in the nests of other birds. But he is an aider and an abettor and a full accomplice.

Another bird of a very bad character is the Red-backed Shrike. His crimes run not on the lines of cunning exploitation. They are crimes of ferocity and cold cruelty. He has what might be called a Chinese sense of torture. His prey consists of lizards and frogs and small birds and mice, and humble bees and large insects generally. He often impales these unfortunate little beings on thorns, so that he may devour them at his leisure. The country people give him various sinister nick-names which more or less fit him. One of these is "Murdering Pie." He is not given to singing, but when he is kept in a cage he will sometimes imitate what musical sounds he hears.

The Benefit of the Doubt.

Whether the Sparrow Hawk can be called a villain or not I don't quite know. But if he be a villain he is at least a straight and honest one. There is neither guile nor hypocrisy about him. He is a killer who kills whatever and whenever he can. He is not very popular in the farmyard, for good and sufficient reasons. But though the farmers do not regard him with a comfortable eye, the naturalists do. For, according to them, he is one of Nature's balance-keepers.

This is all very well, but when the Sparrow Hawk destroys your chicks or your pigeons it is but icy comfort to be told that he makes up for it by destroying something else. It is a kind of logic that does not appeal strongly to the human mind. Keeping the balance is all very well if it is not kept at your expense. Such is the way that the farmer is apt to look at it.

Still the Sparrow Hawk is a most beautiful bird to see. It is an ideal embodiment of the fighting instinct. It is strange how the sight of a perfect being of combat appeals to something foundational in our nature. The nest of the Sparrow Hawk is made of twigs and is shallow. It builds in trees in remote places, or on high rocks near the sea.

I would like to speak of another bird I know. He is not a villain, but I fear he is a ruffian. It is the Robin.

Perhaps I ought not to mention him in connection with birds whom I consider to be villains, but I think that he is a bit of a ruffian all the same. I must confess to a great liking for him, though at the same time I have to admit that he is a hectorer and a bully. The stout Robin, who calls to see me every day, sets no store upon the adage of live and let live. He stands in the midst of the morsels I lay down for all my bird guests, and he won't allow them to approach. It is only when he has gone that my other guests dare come. I believe he would take everything off with him if he could.

He is not a villain, of course. But that he is a ruffian is plain.

Norwich Plainheads and their Show Deportment.

The Importance of Training.

BY E. W. ALLSOPP, CARDIFF.

ALTHOUGH I was a stranger, here were birds, many never having been to a show, that did not mind the look of me a little bit, nor anybody else. Stock cocks and hens, flying in groups in large flight cages, were coaxed to a perch by themselves, again the cane; and open doors, and "Hey, Presto!" they were showing me their very best in the show cage. Not a sick or sorry bird in the room, every bird upon the top notch of health and condition, and in full possession of the senses. The £6 spent, I can truly say, was "bread cast upon the waters," and it has returned to me manifold, as I think it may do with any reader who will practise such methods as are really necessary.

The Value of an Extra Door.

The cages generally were of the usual type, but all the wire fronts possessed not only the usual sliding door, but also a swing door, this being situated in the middle division, and opening direct upon the left-hand perch. Whilst the birds can be trained by tapping to "run," as it is generally termed, from the perch to the floor of the cage, and thence into the show cage, I nevertheless find in practice that the training of the birds to leave the perch and hop through the swing door is easier to bring about.

Having bred some youngsters, training operations should commence at the most impressionable age, which, I think, is between five and eight weeks. Before that age they do not seem to have "all their buttons," whilst if they are older than seven or eight weeks you will find 'tis you who need all your buttons on.

Let me at once say the whole business is just a game of patience with a big dash of determination, and with due recognition of this, you will not view the matter as a relaxation. For the preliminary lessons, if I could have my way, I should choose nice, quiet Sunday afternoons, after the Salvation Army band has finished, and steer for the drawing-room with my bag of tricks, consisting of a single breeding cage, containing the family of youngsters, a clean show cage, a cane about twelve inches long, and nobody else, not even the dog, for it would not do to release your pent-up feelings in a good, hearty kick, all because of the bird-training.

In Strictest Seclusion.

Now, having drawn the lace curtains, so that inquisitive folk opposite can only study the pattern, arrange the breeding cage containing the family at a convenient height when sitting (and if I were you I should sit down to it), and in a manner that the youngsters can only just see to hop from perch to perch, whereas the show cage, when held to the open door of the breeding cage, is in full light, and facing yourself. Remember what you are about to attempt is to encourage the birds to lose all fear of yourself and everybody else, so that every opportunity should be given the birds of undertaking everything they do in full view of yourself.

Having got nicely settled, single out in your mind the youngster to first enjoy your patronage, and then stick to him closer than a brother. Gently intrude the cane behind him, and by gentle movements, and lots of quiet talking, endeavour to persuade him to enter the show cage. When accomplished, close both doors quietly, and then gently tap with the finger nails "See the conquering hero comes" upon the bottom of the cage, with variations if you like, and after a few minutes run him back and try another.

Once you have gained each bird's confidence, which should have been accomplished by the time the birds are six weeks old, the rest is easy, for it amounts to just regularly running out each bird each day, and giving the most promising frequent spells of a day or so in the show cage. The real secret appears to be in bringing about a sense of security in the bird, or a feeling of being quite at home, either in the stock or show cage, and, of course, such can only be brought about by the regularly carrying out a programme right through the moult, and almost to the eve of the show.

In conclusion, I will ask my readers, most of whom are, I hope, working towards the show bench, to compare the chances of an exhibitor's birds well trained, with those of even birds better in fancy points, but which reach the show bench and stand before the judge filled with terror and apprehension for their safety.

A Ridiculous Spectacle.

At the present season of the year we may see to what a ridiculous spectacle our best show cock or hen can be reduced by the subtle workings of the pairing or breeding fever. As we see the cock bird vibrating and swaying with passionate singing to his mate, we wonder what has become of that nice, round, full skull of a few months ago, also where is that cobbiness which pleased us so.

In place of that lovely type and neatness everywhere we see a Yorkshire-cum-Scotch Fancy, with rows of tucks and flounces of feathers. Disappeared absolutely have all the points that gained many a first and special, and, mark me well, so disappears absolutely your chance of a first and special when showing an untrained bird against those who have been well trained, for as surely as the breeding fever will consume the fancy points of the apple of your eye, so surely also will fear, apprehension, etc., absorb those desirable features. Therefore, train the youngsters in the way they should go is the moral of the story.

ARE OUR JUDGING METHODS ANTIQUATED?

By R. BLINCOE (Rochdale).

A well-known fancier suggests points judging as an innovation that would add interest to our hobby, and help on the novices.

THE short article which I wrote some two years ago advocating judging by points was only a general view of the possibilities, and I was disappointed that none had any suggestions to offer for improving on the crude idea. I then determined to get the thing tried in practice, to see if it were workable. My surprise at the lack of interest shown quickly disappeared when I came to push the matter personally among my acquaintances, for I soon found what a very conservative body bird fanciers are. The amount of cold water poured on me at first was enough to have floated a decent-sized ship, and the most extraordinary misconceptions and prejudices seemed to prevail all round; even old friends whom I knew were well disposed towards me carefully avoided catching my eye, or tactfully plunged into some discussion as far removed from "brids" as possible, presumably with the object of preventing my making an ass of myself and putting them to the pain of having to tell me so.

A Full Explanation Makes Friends.

Nevertheless, I felt pretty confident, and after a while I found that many began to look more favourably on the matter when fully explained. I have now a number of friends who are quite with me in a determination to push it forward, and I think that an account of the difficulties already got over would go a long way towards clearing up wrong ideas.

In the first place I found that some of the people who favoured the scheme proved its worst enemies; one society not a thousand miles from here jumped rashly into it without any previous consideration, tried it under a judge who was strongly prejudiced against it, and of course made a hopeless mull of it. I should never for a moment advocate its general adoption all at once, but it could be gradually introduced for very mixed classes, best bird in show, and similar things, until it began to get over the initial difficulties inseparable from any radical alterations in method. When it began to work smoothly it could then be extended.

My first experience of it personally was at a judging competition, for which I may say it is absolutely the best possible method of educating the novice in the art of taking into consideration the all round excellence of a bird and giving each point its proper value. Here we found difficulty No. 1. We originally gave the points for good qualities, which was reversing the natural way in which most men judge a bird, that is, by picking out its failings, so at the next affair of the kind we deducted points for weaknesses instead, and found this method much more successful. Still, there were too many figures for the average man, and finally we devised a judging card for the Norwich Canary. In this we set out the points adopted by the Norwich Plainhead Club, which are as follows:—Head, 15; neck, 10; back, 10; chest, 15; wings, 10; tail, 5; legs and feet, 5; quality, 15; colour, 15.

Opposite the characteristics for which 15 points were allowed for perfection we put the following deductions: absolutely bad, 15; only fair, 10; good, 5; with intermediate deductions of 12½, 7½, and 2½ respectively. For the qualities with 10 points we made the respective deductions 10, 7, and 3½, with intermediate penalties of 8½, 5, and 2; while for the 5-point qualities the deductions were to be 5, 3, and 1½, with intermediates of 4, 2, and ½. The card when printed appeared like this:—

Scale of Deductions for faults in any point.

Maximum Points as per scale	Bad to Bad	Fair to Fair	Very good to good	Excellent
15 Head	15 12½	10 7½	5 2½	0
15 Colour	15 12½	10 7½	5 2½	0
15 Quality	15 12½	10 7½	5 2½	0
10 Neck	10 8½	7 3½	3½ 2	0
10 Wings	10 8½	7 3½	3½ 2	0
5 Tails	5 4	3 2	1½ 1	0

Maximum 100; Deductions ; Net Points

On the back were printed instructions to this effect: "For each bird set down a figure, as on other side, to be deducted for imperfections in any characteristic. Add up the figures, deduct the total from 100, and the balance is the number of points to which the bird is entitled."

Applying the system to an individual specimen of which it might have been said, "head, good; neck, between good and fair; back, excellent; chest, fair; wings, bad; tail, good; legs and feet, excellent; quality, good; colour, fair," we found the deductions to be 5, 5, 0, 10, 10, 1½, 0, 5, 10; total, 46½. This, deducted from 100, left the bird with a balance of 53½ points. Other birds in the class were treated similarly, and the resultant figures clearly pointed out their order of merit.

Correspondence.

Birds in the Firing Line.

Sir,—The following is an extract from a letter to his mother of a nephew of mine, a member of the Queen Victoria Rifles, who is fighting at the Front in France. It might interest some of your readers. "By the way, only a few yards behind the trenches we found a Canary, a beauty in full plumage, singing at the top of his voice on top of a bush; shells and bullets whizzing all round it. It is quite 'pally,' and still sits there and sings. Uncle Dick would like to know this bit." T. R. Trower.

Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrid.

Reported Successful Breeding in a Darvel Aviary.

Sir,—In September, 1913, there appeared the following letter in the magazine "Countryside": "I send you herewith a photo of a bird I reared this season in my little aviary. It is the offspring of a male Thrush and hen Blackbird. I reared both the parents from nestlings, the Thrush being now seven years old and the Blackbird one year old. The Mule was hatched on June 6, and left the nest on the evening of June 19. The mother fed it all the time until it was able to look after itself. I never once saw the Thrush attempting to feed it. The markings upon it resemble the Thrush, but it is much darker in colour. A friend of mine photographed it for me with great difficulty. It was much alarmed at a stranger entering the aviary, as you will see by its appearance.—David M. Bell."

If this account of the breeding of the Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrid is correct, it would appear to disqualify your correspondent "Hybrid" for the silver medal.

H. Classey.

Sir,—Many thanks for your kind reply to my letter re rare Hybrid bred in my aviary. I am pleased to say the youngsters seem to be doing all right still, and they are ten days old to-morrow, May 12. I would here formally make application for your valuable Cage Birds Breeders' Prize, and herewith enclose a certificate signed by Mr. Hopkins, the President of our Association, who is quite an authority on British Birds. If the young Hybrids are successfully fledged I will try and write you an account of the breeding and rearing of them. Meantime let us hope they may be successfully reared. Again thanking you for your kind letter, and wishing Cage Birds all success.

T. H. Anderson.

Sir,—I hereby beg to certify that I have seen the young Hybrids bred in Mr. Anderson's aviary, and that they are certainly Hybrids, there not being a Blackbird cock in the aviary. I would certainly say that the most likely mating would be with the Song Thrush, it being the only large British Bird except a Corn Bunting in the collection. Nicol C. Hopkins.

The Feeding of Lories.

The Marquis of Tavistock Gives Also Some Valuable Hints on the Treatment of Sunbirds.

Sir.—Mr. E. J. Brook is right in assuming that the ingredients of the Marmite food I offered my Lorikeets were not mixed in the proportions he suggests, and this, together with the fact that I left out the Horlick's Malted Milk, may account for my failure to induce the birds to take to it.

I used to feed my Sunbirds on a mixture consisting of a teaspoonful of honey, a teaspoonful each of Mellin's food and condensed milk, and the insides of 3 or 4 mealworms, stirred up together in half a teacup of very hot (not boiling) water. Two black grapes also were given daily to each bird. The result was most satisfactory, and I have been complimented on the unusually fine condition of my birds by aviculturists, whose own experience of Honey-eaters has been very great, and who have had many successes on the show-bench. Sunbirds should have their baths fixed to the perches, as they never willingly descend to the ground.

It is very important also to cage them separately as soon as they begin to quarrel, for, as a family, they are very quarrelsome when in really good condition, and it is usually unwise to keep on a cock and hen of the same species in one cage of ordinary dimensions. When breeding is attempted, it is best to put the cock with the hen in a very large cage or in an aviary some time before the beginning of the nesting season. If he is already in full breeding condition when the hen is introduced, he will probably either kill her outright or so torment her that her health will suffer severely.

"Cage Birds" at the Front.

A Great Harwood Reader Helps a Soldier Fancier.

Sir,—Every six weeks I forward six copies of your paper, Cage Birds, to one of our soldiers at the front, which I can assure you he thoroughly enjoys. I have one or two letters from him showing that they make him interested in the birds he sees at the front, but up to yet he has failed to come across any of the Dutch Frill breeders among our Allies. He hopes to do so yet, and he proposes letting me have all details as time goes on, if spared, of anything of note in the Cage Bird Fancy. I am keeping all his birds for him, breeding for him, and hope I may have a good stock ready for him when he comes home again. Should he write anything of interest, will write you for publication, for the benefit of good old Cage Birds. I may say that I am doing very well in the breeding, in fact I don't think I have ever had a better start in first round before. I am getting plenty of young. A. Bentley.

The Clashing of Society Meetings.

Sir,—I see in your last week's issue that the sec. of South Moor Social F.F.C.B.S. complains of club secs. calling meetings on the same night as they hold their meetings, and he says it is the reason they had a bad turn up. Now I am the only member who was at the East Stanley F.F.C.B.S. meeting, that is a member of the South Moor Social F.F.C.B.S., and I am sec. of the East Stanley society. I cannot see why he should have sent a report like this to Cage Birds.

Chickweed Better than Watercress for Young Canaries.

Sir,—I was wondering if fanciers generally realised the value of chickweed as a green food in the rearing of young Canaries. I have bred Canaries for a good few years, and at one time thought I could not rear any birds unless I used watercress as a green food. With about twenty pairs of birds I found this meant quite a shilling a week for watercress alone; I also found it was rather difficult to get it fresh in hot weather. But for several years now I have used only chickweed, and I find the old birds like it, and feed well with it; it seems to suit the young A1. Of course, as I live in the country and have no difficulty in getting it, whereas town folks no doubt can get watercress much more easily, but where it can be got for nothing, now that times are bad, it would mean a bit saved perhaps which would help the seed bill. Fanciers should make sure when getting chickweed that the flower is white, as there is a similar weed which has a blue flower. I like the seedy chickweed that has been grown on a poor soil best, as it does not grow quite so rank.

A Caged Song Thrush Adopts a Foster Child.

Sir,—I have a cock Thrush, wild caught last autumn, and a grand songster. On May 5th I was out for a stroll, and I brought home a nest of Thrushes, some of which bolted from the nest. I put them in a cage and fed them, but gradually lost them except one. I hung both this and my old bird on a fence, but one day I put one cage on the fence and the other on opposite wall, and soon after I heard the cock make a calling noise and saw him with food in his beak. I thought possibly I had disturbed him when feeding, but I noticed this several times during the day. The next day he was again carrying food about, and I thought perhaps he wanted to feed the young one, so I put the young one into his cage and he immediately fed it, and has done so since. If I put in a snail he will not let the young one have it until he has thoroughly cleaned it by rubbing to and fro on the bottom of cage, shaking it, and knocking on perch. If the young one comes for it before it is ready, he goes for it and they have a scrap up, after which he goes on cleaning it. When it is ready the young one opens his mouth and he puts it well down the throat, and then prepares another until he has satisfied it for the time being. Has anyone had a similar experience? I have not heard him sing since he has had the young one to rear.

When Collecting Ants' Eggs and Wasp Grubs.

Sir,—I should be extremely obliged if any reader of Cage Birds could give me information as to the taking of ants' and wasps' nests, the month when ready, the precautions necessary to prevent stings and bites, and the preserving of eggs and grubs.

A Cage Bird Society for Pontypool.

Sir,—A meeting was held on May 15, in Park Restaurant, Commercial Street, at which Mr. H. H. Vaughan was elected to the chair (pro tem.), and Mr. C. Pearce kindly consented to take notes of the business. After it had been decided that the name of the society should be The Pontypool and Dist. C.B.S., and membership open to Monmouth, the chairman gave an able address on the aims and objects of the society. Eleven members were elected, and several said that there had been a long felt want of a society of the description in Pontypool, all expressing their willingness to do their utmost to make the society successful. Mr. W. Amphlett was elected chairman, Mr. C. Pearce treasurer; committee, Mr. A. Nelms, Mr. J. A. Clark, and Mr. C. Gameson; the remainder of the committee will be elected at the next meeting, May 29. After considerable difficulty in getting a sec., the writer was prevailed upon to accept the position. We expect to have a few more members at our next meeting.

Wild Birds with Rings.

Send Particulars When Found.

Sir,—Most of your readers will be aware of my scheme, connected with the magazine "British Birds," for ringing wild birds. Briefly, the idea is to place a ring round the leg of as many birds as possible. On each ring is inscribed my name and address, and a number. Each number is entered in a schedule, and full details of the date and place of ringing are kept. It has come to my knowledge that sometimes people who find these rings, or capture or shoot the birds, are afraid to give information for fear of prosecution. I should like to be allowed to state that the scheme is solely for scientific purposes; it has already produced results of great value; and I will guarantee that no information will be made use of for any other purpose than a scientific one. I sincerely hope that all your readers who find birds with these rings will communicate the number of ring, species of bird, date and place where found.

Ringed Starling Reported.

Sir,—We caught a Starling this morning in the Aeroplane Depot, Grand Stand, Newcastle. It was a fine specimen, and had a ring on its leg worded "Witherby, High Holborn, London. Number 84179." I have notified the above firm. Wishing Cage Birds every success. G. Ashton.

Awarding Cups and Medals.

Sir,—In answer to the very able letter by Mr. Morton dealing with the above subject, the example he gives of a cup competed for on lines somewhat similar to what I suggest is not a fair one. In the first place, fancy any rational society allowing one competitor to put six birds in one class and without competiton to count all the points. I have heard there was a rush on the Liverpool bird market a few days before that particular show. In my opinion, no class should count points unless there are three competitors, and not less than four entries. Again, British should not be allowed to count points against Canaries. If there are many exhibitors of British birds in a society, they should have a cup solely for Britishers. The reason I suggested shows throughout the season is there are one or two societies in the Liverpool district who run two or three old bird shows in a season, besides Nest Feather shows. I quite agree with Mr. Morton that the Nest Feather shows should not count for specials or cups. His idea concerning the entry forms is a capital one. All the entry forms should be sent in and opened in front of the committee and secretary at a stated time; and I would add "all entries arriving after the specified time to be returned." The only unkind cut in Mr. Morton's letter is contained in the last few sentences, when he chides me for not running with the majority. I would like to tell him I am not up against any society or fellow fancier. My only desire is by friendly discussion to improve the social as well as the financial position of our local societies. There are some real fine sportsmen amongst the Liverpool fanciers, and if they would give their views on the subject it would benefit the Fancy generally.

Wagtails in Ireland.

Sir,—It might interest Cage Birds readers to hear that last November I saw a beautiful pair of Yellow Wagtails feeding in the yard when the fowls were fed. To-day I saw them in the garden with four lovely young ones, just out of the nest. I did not know the Yellow Wagtail wintered here (South of Ireland).

Shama.

[The birds were probably Grey Wagtails, which are common resident birds in Ireland. The Yellow Wagtail is migratory, it does not remain in Great Britain after September, and is at no time common in Ireland. The species resemble each other sufficiently closely as to be easily mistaken by a casual observer.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

When Judges Disagree.

The Case of "White Rose."

Sir,—I don't wish to defend myself against misrepresentations; when there are three dogs biting at one bone it is a bit rough on the bone. But I should like to say a few words regarding the letters of last week. "Patrick" doesn't seem to like the gruel I meted out to him. Probably he forgets the way he swallowed up Messrs. Blake and Hainsworth. I suppose he thought he was going to do the same with me, but I am not so easily swallowed up. His letter is there for all the Fancy to see. I know what he said, and I know what he meant. It is a great pity anyone should contradict him at all. He said as a Canary-Bullie the bird had been considerably overrated, but if he will read Mr. Craig's letter he will see that he says "What a fine noble bird it is. Dark Canary-Bullfinches were weeds in comparison to this bird, and the Greenie-Bullies weren't in it for size and substance." Regarding the £5 he makes so much shout about, it is absurd to wager on such a bird, as the correspondence is headed "When Judges Disagree." I would put £5 down if I could have my own judge, and I suppose Mr. Craig would do the same. Patrick goes on to say I have done more harm to the bird than anyone else. I fail to see it; my letter was a plain open letter, no sarcasm to anyone, and yet I had to be swallowed up "Patrick" is the one who has tried to do the bird harm. Does he think by saying it has been considerably overrated, badly splashed, etc., he has done the bird some good? If he does, I don't. His letters from the start have been full of nothing but sarcasm. I have read every word of the discussion, and I know everything that is worth knowing about the bird. And if you aren't Irish, "Patrick," you shouldn't christen yourself. "Pat." You ought to call yourself "Red Rose" or "Scotch Thistle"; you would be nearer the mark.

"Mansfield" seems to know more about my stock and my abilities than I do myself, but for his eulightenment I will just say that I have kept British Hardbills and Softbills for over twenty years, so I think I have served my apprenticeship by now. At the present time I have British and Foreign Hardbills and Softbills, ranging from a Linnet to Sunbirds, and also Mules, so I don't think I shall require any of "Mansfield's" information. I notice because Mr. Craig has spoken he is beginning to climb down like a good boy. Did not his secretary at the commencement of the controversy state what the bird was bred from? I suppose he has forgotten, but I have not. I know there are some good Canary men in and about Mansfield, and probably one of the best in England, but when you've said that you're done. What he knows about me or my stock he will soon forget. I should like to inform him I have bred Hybrids, and I know as much about the discussion as he does. In reply to "Hyson Green" I will say this is the limit. Fancy a man living in the same town as myself writing to Cage Birds, when he could argue the point with me personally. Let me tell you, Hyson Green, that I can speak for myself. I never said the bird was a Greenie-Bullie at all, and I neither want your advice nor Mansfield's. What a fine noble lot of fellows you are to be sure, only one out of all the lot dare publish his name! If you'll read my letter again you'll have a very difficult job to find where I made anyone look small. J. W. Saywell.

CRYSTAL PALACE & PENGE C.B.S.

Meeting, Alexandra Hotel, Penge, May 12. After usual business we had a pleasant evening asking and answering questions. Quite a volley of questions were answered to the satisfaction of the members by Messrs. Foxen, Fairman and Hutton. It was decided to convey the congratulations of the members to the members serving with H.M. forces, wishing them all a safe return; amongst them are our president, Mr. O. Stone, Messrs. Baker, Dyer, Rogers, etc.—W. D. Fryett.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Meeting Oldham Hall, Mr. J. Abbott chair, fair attendance. Mr. Mundell was elected to judge annual show in Nov. A meeting of delegates re amalgamated show will be held May 31, 8, at Messrs. Bunner's, Brownlow Hill. The chief item of the evening was a lecture on colour feeding by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, which proved both interesting and instructive. Questions being invited, the members took full advantage, and Mr. Metcalfe was equal to the occasion. We were specially honoured by the presence of our worthy president, Mr. W. R. Knowles. Next meeting N.F. night show, which we hope will be a success. Local fanciers are cordially invited.—Thos. R. Jones.

BORDER CITY (Carlisle) O.S.

Meeting headquarters, May 5, Mr. G. Higgins chair. It had been proposed at an earlier meeting that we should try to obtain silver cups for each section at our annual show; Borders, Nor., Yorks, Mules, Brit., For., by means of private subs. among members' friends. These subs. have come in wonderfully well, and the order for the cups has been given. These should stimulate competition amongst fanciers, as we will now have a grand array to offer. Nine cups at a provincial show of six years standing is a credit to any society, but as we stick to the motto of our ancient city ("Be just and fear not") in all our undertakings we are never wanting in friends. Classification: Borders 18 classes, Nor. 14, Yorks 11, A.O.V. 1, Hyb. 5, Brit. 14. For. left over for later consideration. Sec. was instructed to apply for patronage of B.F.C.C., O.N.P.C., Y.C.C., N.B.F.C.C., N.Y.C.C., N.N.P.C., N.B.B.M. and F.B.C., C. and W.Y.C.C. Decided to hold young bird shows in July and on August Bank Holiday. First ramble of the season May 23.—J. C. Bell.

SHETTLESTON CARNTYNE C.B.S

Monthly meeting, Houstan's Tea Rooms, May 15. An excellent turnout of members showed the interest taken in this new club. Three new members joined and 7 proposed, bring the membership up to almost incredible figures. Mr. A. Hendrie is giving a medal to the member who has most new members to his credit at the end of the year. Another cup is being presented to the club for competition at our annual show, and the Sec. is giving a medal to novice with most entries at our F.F. show, and 3 specials for the same are also promised. Judging by reports of members this promises to be one of the largest and finest F.F. shows held in the district. There are 143 young birds among the members present for the first round. Proposed to have open classes at Anual Show; was left over until next meeting. The meeting closed with expressions of sorrow and sympathy to Mr. J. Ward, Mrs. Ward and family through the loss of their son, Mr. J. L. Ward, M.A., who lost his life through the sinking of the "Lusitania." An extra promising scholar, a splendid type of manhood, taken away on the eve of a brilliant future.—J. Irvine, Sec.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting, May 10, Church Institute, 60, Paddington-st., Mr. A. W. Curtis chair, and 28 members present. Letters read from Messrs. F. Knight, P. Johnson and A. Watcham. Mrs. A. M Cook was elected a member, and Mr. P. Johnson nominated. A vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. W. Smith for the generous gift of 10s. towards the Crest Cup. A letter was read from the Sec. of the N.B.B. and M.C. Schedule of Young Bird Show, July 3, drawn up: 27 Canary classes, 2 Hyb., 16 Brit. and 6 For. Results of the British Finch Competition were announced: 1, Chard, 78 points; 2, Offord, 77; 3, Sanders, Ossett, Butterfield, 76. Upon a draw taking place for 3rd prize, A. Ossett was declared the winner. A collection took place for defraying the cost of the wreath sent to the late Mr. Easterling's funeral, the balance of 2s. 6d. over being sent to the widow. Sec. announced the engagement of Miss Maher, whose wedding takes place on June 6, and it was agreed for the secretary to act upon two suggestions made with reference to the event. Mr. G. E. Weston then gave a lecture upon "The Interesting Side of Heredity," in which he dealt with many matters of moment to bird-breeders. At the close questions were asked by many members and satisfactorily answered. A vote of thanks to Mr. Weston for his interesting and instructive lecture was carried with great acclamation. Mr. Weston, in his usual modest way, replied. A vote of thanks to chair closed the meeting.—Victor Wynn, Hon. Sec.

Members please note that I have removed to 15, Aubrey-rd., Glynfach, Porth.—J. S. Jones, Hon. Sec.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

"A Straight Talk on the Norwich Plainhead," By Mr. Barker Clegg.

Meeting held April 20, Rev. C. E. Gaul presiding. After the usual business, which included the election of two new members, Mr. Barker Clegg was called upon to give his lecture. In opening, Mr. Clegg wished it to be understood that he had no intention whatever of offending anyone, but that he had come to talk straight about the Norwich Plainhead, and straight it would be.

The Norwich Plainhead 30 years ago was the most popular bird on the show bench, Yorkshires being insignificant at that time. The first Open Show held at Manchester was in 1883. From 1871 to 1873 Cayenne feeding was invented, but it was not until about 1880 that it became really popular. There were then classes arranged for colour-fed and natural colour birds. Agitation amongst fanciers brought about a change to natural colour and yellow-fed birds, but at the present time colour-feeding is so popular that birds are of very small consequence without it, although Mr. Clegg believes that colour-feeding has had a detrimental effect on the number of fair fanciers. Lizards used to be brought in for colour, but in doing so size was lost, thereby necessitating double buffing to recover size. Mr. Clegg emphatically stated that the present Norwich Plainhead was a combination of the different birds which we have to-day (Lizard, Lancashire, Crest, etc.). He is, or has been, a member of all these clubs, therefore he was speaking from first-hand information. Twelve years ago a craze for size came into being, when the Norwich Plainhead Club was formed. This sort of thing has gone on until we have at the present birds of irregular type, which is very unsatisfactory. Two or three different types of birds are shown in one class. What is really wanted, says Mr. Clegg, is a universal standard, not what each individual judge fancies. Too much touting for judges was another complaint. Nowadays, he said, we have big, fat, lazy, sulky looking, irregular shaped birds winning on the show bench. Why should this be? Mr. Clegg pleaded for a common standard (see "Our Canaries," page 138); round and full, clear entrance and neat, it being one-half of a bird to have a good entrance; neck short and thick; chest broad and full; wings and tail short; feathers silky; and back well filled in. The only way to get such a type of bird on the benches is that combinations or society members agree amongst themselves to breed only with this specific object, and select judges capable and willing to judge to the standard and to the standard only. Mr. Clegg is of the opinion that the Norwich Plainhead Society has entirely failed in its objects, and has in consequence decreased in its membership. A little advice was given to fanciers attending shows not satisfied with the winning birds. The judge should be questioned, and if capable, the judge ought to be able to say why such particular birds were amongst the cards. No capable judge ought to fear criticism. Mr. Clegg incidentally referred to an incident which occurred at a show in Oldham, at the Wheatsheaf Hotel. He, being the judge, placed a bird, although minus a claw, which could knock spots off any other in the class. One fancier, who was further down in the cards, reprimanded Mr. Clegg for putting what he called half a bird first. The critic was silenced when asked wouldn't he like to swop his whole bird for the half a one.

In answer to questions Mr. Clegg agreed that some good birds had recently been shown on the benches, and that birds may and do alter during the shows. It was also unanimously agreed that judges to a certain extent dare not, for fear of boycott, judge to a standard. Another complaint was that there was a tendency to "look" for birds. Several other questions were very ably dealt with by Mr. Barker Clegg, who responded to a hearty vote of thanks, which brought a most instructive evening to a close.—Thos. Hall, Press Corr.

ATTERCLIFFE C.B.S.

Meeting, May 13, Mr. Havenhand chair. Decided to alter date of N.F. Show from June 26 to July 10, to avoid clashing with the Sheffield societies' shows. Mr. G. Browning was elected judge. The delegate's report of the business accomplished at the meeting re Amalgamated Show was considered highly satisfactory, and we trust and believe that this fixture will be a signal success.—E. Johnson, Sec.

DERBY C.B.S.

The Committee have decided to open out in organizing lectures for the benefit of the members. The first was held on Saturday, and Mr. J. Heighton, late of Leicester C.B.S. and now a member of the Derby Society, gave a splendid lecture on "Rearing and Feeding of Canaries." Discussion followed, and a vote of thanks was passed to him. It was arranged for the Committee to meet monthly; next meeting, May 27th, 7.30, Normanton Hotel.—F. W. Jordan, Hon. Sec.

YORKSHIRE C.C.

Annual meeting, May 8, Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. H. H. Towers chair, and only a moderate attendance. Balance sheet adopted, showing a deficit of £2 7s. 8½d. on the year's working, a result accounted for by the number of outstanding subs., amounting to £4 2s. 6d. Decided that members in arrears be reported to the Yorkshire Union, and the other specialist Yorkshire clubs, as per bye-law 14 in the club's Handbook. Result of ballot for officers, 1915-16: Pres., Mr. H. H. Towers; Vice-Pres., Mr. C. Morrison; Committee, inside Yorkshire, Messrs. H. Hill, W. A. Cowgill, L. Dykes, F. Hammond, T. Ogden, H. J. Chittenden, W. H. Shackleton, A. Cooper, W. Cruise and R. Garnett; outside, Messrs. T. C. Crawhall, J. W. Ramsden, A. Hirst, J. W. Metcalfe and T. Rowlands. Additional Committee elected by the meeting, Messrs. F. Armstrong, J. Bailey, J. Chambers, P. Mason, L. C. Casey, E. Clegg, S. Midgley, L. Ogden, G. Snead and H. Simonett; Auditors, Messrs. R. W. Alderson and R. Garnett; Sec. and Treas., J. Greaves; Assist. Sec., W. Crabtree. Owing to the small return (31) of voting papers it was decided in future the election shall be by ballot at annual meeting. Votes of thanks were accorded to retiring officers and donors of special prizes. Mr. C. Morrison proposed and Mr. G. Snead seconded that the sub. for 1915-16 of our late respected member, Mr. F. Easterling, be returned, along with a letter of sympathy with his widow. Five resignations accepted and 13 new members admitted. Decided to continue all the club's competitions in 1915-16. Secs. desiring the club's patronage at their coming shows please apply to John Greaves, 279, Hollings-rd., Bradford.

CINNAMON-MARKED Y.C.C.

Annual general meeting, May 1, Market Tavern, Bradford. Balance sheet for 1914-15, showing a profit of over £3, was read by the Sec. This was considered very good seeing the troublous times we are passing through. Officers elected: Pres., Mr. C. Morrison; Vice-Pres., Mr. A. Brown and Mr. W. Richmond; Committee, Messrs. A. Cooper, W. H. Symer, O. Atkingson, A. Whitley, J. W. Baker, L. C. Casey, A. M. Craven, S. Midgley, F. P. Terry, H. H. Towers, B. Townend, J. E. Hudson, E. Lumb, C. Duckworth, R. Sutcliff, G. Snead, J. Harney, T. Odgen, W. A. Cowgill, W. B. Atkingson; Auditors, Messrs. Firth and Hartley; Sec. and Treas., R. Garnett. It was again decided to have three competitions in connection with the club—Open, Amateur and Novice—the same conditions as last year. Prizes to be fixed later, as we may not get the same support this year as last, but it was hoped that all fanciers who could would help the Committee in their efforts. As the yearly sub. is so very low, 1/6 per year, we have not much to work on just now with time so rough. It was again decided to offer our patronage to societies who make 4 open classes for Cin.-marked Yorks., and to ask societies desiring our patronage to apply as early as possible to help us to get all in working order. In our Novice Competition, which has been confined to Y.U. Novice classes for two years, it was decided that the Sec. write all the Y.U. Show Secs., pressing them to have two Novice classes for Cin.-marks. Mr. Morrison, who had been re-elected as President, thanked the members for their confidence, and also those members who had given the Cin-marked Club money or value towards the special prize list. A discussion took place on the number of Cin.-marked classes which ought to be provided, and the general opinion seemed to be that societies could only expect to get the best out of the Cin-marks by making as extended a classification as possible; the opinion was expressed that the number of breeders of Cin.-marks was on the increase. Votes of thanks to retiring officers and donors of special prizes concluded the meeting. The date of first meeting of Committee was left to Sec. There are still some who have not paid last year's subs. I should like them to forward same as early as possible as I am again preparing a Year Book, but cannot put in their names if they have not paid for last year.—R. Garnett, Sec.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

BREEDING WITH MULE (T.D.S.).—I will not go so far as to say that it is impossible for a Mule to breed, but I do say that it is in the highest degree improbable. As a general rule Mules are sterile, and I do not advise you to mate a Canary with a Linnet Mule if you wish to have a reasonable chance of raising young. Such matings should be only made as experiments, pure and simple, when it is of no great importance whether they succeed or fail.

A BROKEN LEG (C.P.).—You say the leg is broken just above the joint, but omit to say which joint you refer to. If it is the joint where the fleshy part of the leg and also the short downy feathers cease, and the lower part of leg does not hang limp, the best thing you can do is to leave it severely alone, and place the bird in a small cage, with the perches low down, well-fitting, and securely fixed in position, and the food and water placed as convenient as possible for the bird—inside the cage if you can place it so without fluttering the bird about. Keep it thus, and allow it to remain as quiet as possible until it resumes activity and begins to use the injured leg again of its own accord. But if the leg hangs limp it will be necessary to support it on a small splint, made out of some such thing as a match stick padded with wool. It requires some little skill and dexterity to put on this, and the ends of the fractured bone must be gently brought into juxtaposition, with the leg and foot in a normal position before it is secured in position. It is really a job for a medical man or a veterinary surgeon, and unless the bird is sufficiently valuable to warrant placing it in such hands I think it far more merciful to get a chemist to administer a dose of chloroform. Amateur attempts at surgery are not to be commended from a humane standpoint.

DEFECTIVE HIND CLAW (Horseman).—Hold the foot in a saucer of fairly hot water for a minute or two, and then transfer it at once to a saucer of quite cold water for a similar period; repeat these tactics three or four times, and finish up in the cold water. Then dry and gently rub the foot with a little stimulating embrocation, such as Elliman's. Also, for the next few weeks put in the cage small and nearly round perches—about the calibre of an ordinary lead pencil—and see that they are of a nice soft wood, and fixed in the cage securely to prevent any chance of them wobbling about when the bird is on them.

BARE HEAD AND NECK (Manx).—I agree with you, the treatment you refer to is not a pleasant one. It is merely a relic of those dark days when ignorance reigned supreme. The former bird doubtless recovered its plumage in spite of it, rather than on account of its virtues. This bareness is a common trouble, and one most difficult, at times, to remedy. To have a fair chance of success the treatment should coincide with a natural moulting season. Anyway, treat as follows for a couple of months, and if the plumage is not then recovered, repeat the same treatment every alternate month until the moulting season arrives. Every third day, in addition to its staple seed diet, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake lightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the intervening days give first in the drinking water ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and next half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts millet, niger, teazle and broken groats. Give a fair supply of green food in variety daily, and allow the bird to bathe as freely as it likes. During the first month you may slightly moisten the bare skin once a week with a camel-hair brush dripped in vinegar.

DIED YOUNG (H. Garside).—You do not give sufficient particulars to enable me to tell with any confidence what was the cause of the young dying at five days old, notwithstanding that the hen fed them. You make no mention of green food, but say you used egg food only. If this means that you had not begun to give any green food, it is not improbable that the young died as the consequence of congested bowels, which might have been remedied by the judicious use of green food from the third or fourth day after hatching. Try this method with the next brood, with which I think the hen will do much better. I take it that you are quite certain the hen actually fed them, but the failure to increase in size in five days is rather against this theory. Possibly when you thought she was feeding them she was only looking at them and wondering what it all meant.

A WOULD-BE BREEDER (Learner Killie).—It seems to me that the cock could hardly have been in very vigorous health when you mated him, to judge by his behaviour now. Maybe the spell of wretched weather just recently upset both the birds. My advice to you is to avoid launching out extensively this season. Begin in a quite small way, say, with two or three pairs, not necessarily valuable birds, and gain a little experience in managing these before going in for the hobby extensively. In short, learn to walk before you try to run. You should also get a copy of our handbook, "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our manager will send you, post free, for 7d., and follow the directions therein implicitly for this season, and you need not go far wrong, and will accumulate a fund of practical experience that will be invaluable to you in future seasons. It would be impossible to go into useful details here. For the present give, in addition to the staple diet, which should consist of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape, a small teaspoonful of egg food, with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it every second day, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and linseed. Give also a young growing stool of dandelion daily—cut off the root just below the surface of the ground, and give it entire, leaves, blooms and seed heads. Treat thus until the hen settles down to nest, or for a month, whichever is the longer period. The birds would certainly be better in another room where the temperature is fairly equable, but free from cold draughts or damp; but it would not be wise to remove them now until the weather is quite settled again.

A TRIO (W. B.).—(1) If the hen Canary has been mated only with the Mule, the chances are very vastly in favour of the eggs being sterile. See reply to "T. D. S." in this issue on this subject. (2) There is no reason whatever why you should not mate the hen with a cock Canary if nothing comes of this attempt, if you wish to do so. She will be quite capable of producing fertile eggs to a Canary or any other Finch that is not a hybrid. (3) No, it is not yet too late to start breeding. There is plenty of time to get one brood, or possibly two, if the birds are ready to set to work at once.

RETURNING COCK (P.C. 495).—It would be most injudicious to return the cock when the young have hatched out, as his disposition is clearly one that is not to be trusted. Your best course is to take him right away out of sight and earshot of the hen until she is ready to begin nesting again, and even then it should be deferred, if possible, until the young are either out of the nest or sufficiently fledged to be able to manage without the hen brooding them, so that you could transfer them to a nursery cage, where the hen, and possibly also the cock, in these circumstances, would feed them all right. If the hen refuses to feed the next brood, and you have no opportunity of transferring them to another hen with young about the same age, try tempting her with a variety of foods and green food—lettuce, chickweed, or the tender tips of groundsel, for preference—and also offer a bath in which you have dissolved a little common salt, and add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to the drinking water for two days. Give food only in small quantities, and fresh two or three times a day, and continue with that with which she seems to feed best, whatever it may be. Do not worry the hen by constant interference, but if she stops feeding you may fill the little crops yourself morning and evening with a little egg food moistened to a pap. After doing this for a few days the hen may take up her duties and rear the young satisfactorily.

GONE OFF CONDITION (W. G. S.).—I suspect these hens were upset by the recent wretched spell of weather. You should have put them at once in a quite warm place, which would probably have been all that was required to keep them up to concert pitch. Put them now in a fairly warm place, free from direct draughts, and in addition to the usual dietary give a morsel of sponge cake moistened with a few drops of sherry daily for a week. Also give a third of a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame every second day, and on the alternate days a young growing stool of dandelion. A couple of mealworms a day for each bird would also be beneficial if the birds will eat them. If at first they refuse them, crush the head of one and fasten it on the end of the perch with a pin, and they will soon learn to appreciate them.

OFF SONG AND IRRITABLE (A. T.).—Although you say that you can find no trace of red mites, I have no doubt that they are at the root of the mischief. Examine the cage again thoroughly, especially any open joints, cracks, or wire holes, and ends of perches, probing if necessary any cracks or holes with a pin on to a piece of white paper, and I imagine you will unearth something. Look well about the surface of the cage outside, and if you find any areas covered with white powdery-looking specks, you may be quite certain there is a colony of mites near by. If you discover any, take the necessary steps to exterminate them, as frequently advised in this column. Every second day for a week give the bird a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and finally sprinkled with soft sugar, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. After the first week add twenty drops of Chemical Food to the water four times a week for a fortnight. See that the bird is not exposed to direct draughts, and in searching for red mites do not overlook the nail or hook upon which the cage hangs.

VISCID DROPPINGS (T. P. M.).—(1) The abnormal condition of the droppings is due to the dietary or to unwholesome food of some kind. See that all your seeds and other foods are of good quality and given fresh. In addition to the staple seed diet, give every second day for a week a morsel of Bread soaked in cold milk, drained, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days give a morsel of banana. Give a couple of leaves of dandelion daily. In the drinking water add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and six drops of syrup of rhubarb daily for three days, and after this give instead five drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week. (2) The sample of canary seed marked No. 1 is of very good size, plump, sweet, and of first-rate quality all round. No. 2 is exceedingly small, not very well ripened, and it is also slightly musty. It is therefore not fit to form the staple diet of Canaries. By the way, these samples seem to have been transposed. The one marked No. 1 being in packet marked G.S., and No. 2 in one marked L.S.—equivalent to "Good Spanish" and "Large Spanish" respectively. (3) A good seed should be of fair size, stout and plump in substance, showing a comparatively large amount of kernel for husk, clean and bright, without any green unripened seeds, and when a little is chewed in the mouth the flavour should be as pleasant as chewing a few grains of good wheat. If you compare the two samples you sent me, taking No. 1 as typical of a good all round seed, and No. 2 as a very inferior quality, you should have no difficulty in telling a good seed from a bad one. A peck usually consists of 14lbs. weight.

SWELLING UNDER WING (Yorkshire Cock).—I cannot say definitely from your description what the swelling is, but in all probability it is a serous abscess. If the bird is helping to rear a brood, it would be better to allow it to finish off the brood before attempting any treatment. If not so occupied, or when it has finished, catch it and carefully prick the swelling with a quite clean needle, and paint the place once a day for a few days after with a camel hair brush dipped in extract of witch hazel. Watch it a week or two later to see if the swelling is returning, and if so paint it a few times with tincture of iodine, allowing a period of three or four days to elapse between each painting.

SLOW STARTERS (Novice).—The hens are not necessarily too old to breed, but their ages may account for them being rather late in coming into full breeding condition. Probably they are only waiting until the spring gets a little more advanced. Give each a whole stool of dandelion fresh gathered daily—leaves, blooms, and seed heads altogether. Also give a morsel of egg food every second day, and a little mixed seed on the alternating days. It would certainly be a judicious thing to get two healthy, vigorous hens of last season, if you can be fairly sure of getting untried hens, ready to nest, and mate them with the cocks, and by the time these were beginning to sit, the older hens would doubtless be in a more ready condition to set to work. In any case, it would be having four chances of success instead of two, with a better prospect generally.

DROOPING WING (Camden).—(1) As the bird appears in quite good health and feather, I would certainly advise you to leave the drooping wing alone. It may be no more than a mere passing idiosyncrasy, which will have quite disappeared by the time the young are hatched. (2) The most you can expect to do for this bird is to alleviate its condition when it becomes more acute from weather conditions from time to time. Do not attempt to breed with it at any time. See that it is kept in a bright, healthy place, where the temperature fluctuates as little as possible, and moderately warm, though it need not be overheated, and free from direct cold draughts. A dust laden atmosphere and the fumes of burning lights must also be strictly avoided. Give occasionally a morsel of bread and milk on which you have dropped three or four drops of cod liver oil emulsion and sprinkled with maw seed. Give a little green food in variety daily, and a third of a teaspoonful of maw seed three times a week. Get a chemist to mix you two drachms each of glycerine and oxymel of squills, one drachm each of chlorodyne and ipecacuanha wine, and eight grains of iodide of potassium. Give twenty drops of this in the water two days in every three for a fortnight, then miss a week, and begin again and give it for another fortnight. You may also keep this mixture handy and give twenty drops doses in the water every second day, or for a few days in succession, any time when the symptoms become acute.

SIB BREEDING (X Ray).—(1) To continue the strain of sib-breds you should mate the young of last season and the parents among themselves this year, provided they have not been very closely inbred before, and that they are strong robust birds. Any that are obviously weak and delicate you should discard altogether from this strain. Reserve the biggest and strongest hen from each of last year's hens for mating with the old cock this year, running him with two as you did last year. The biggest and strongest young cock may be mated with the two old hens in the same way. Then mate the remainder of the young together, putting the cocks of one hen with the hens of the other hen, and vice versa, so as to avoid mating a full blooded brother and sister together. (2) It is very much a matter of opinion whether you did right in using a pink-eyed cock in the first instance. Personally, I think you did. I attach some importance to a dash of pink-eyed blood in a strain of Sib-breds. (3) There is still a reasonable chance of getting two broods this season, provide the hens get to work again quickly after they have reared the first brood.

A FAILURE (D. Green).—Losses such as you describe are always apt to occur, even in well-managed establishments, so it is most useless speculating about the cause of them in the absence of all knowledge of the details of management, and you give no particulars whatever. I can only suggest that you see that all your seeds and foods are of good quality and sound, especially any hemp seed you use, and that no food or greenstuff of any kind is allowed to remain about the cage to become stale. The water vessels should also be given very careful attention. The swelling you noticed on the neck of the second youngster was doubtless of emphysematus origin, and may have arisen from a delicate and weak constitution, or from unwholesome food. With the next brood follow the system outlined in reply to "Govanite," in issue of May 8, or get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and be guided by the detailed information therein, and if things go wrong again write immediately and give full particulars, and I will do my best to help you.

RING ON LEG (Ritep).—Unless the ring is too small, so that it fits tightly on the leg and is immovable, there is no risk whatever of its being in any way injurious. As you say the leg appears all right, I take it the ring is more or less loose on the leg, so that you could easily move it up and down the shank. If this is the case, you may rest assured it is not doing any harm at all. The variation in the colour of the legs may be quite natural. I see no reason why you should have it removed, and as it is practically no inconvenience to the bird, I think you would be best advised to leave well alone.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

HANDREARING A MAGPIE (H. Horler).—You should have no trouble to handrear Magpies, they are as easy to rear as chickens, yet it should be done properly, or the result will not be quite satisfactory. Soak a piece of stale bread in cold water for half an hour, squeeze as dry as possible, and mix with it crushed biscuit or biscuit powder and hard-boiled egg, pressed through a sieve or finely chopped; make the whole nicely moist with new milk or diluted condensed milk. In addition to this give small meal worms or pieces, also small garden worms. They may have a very little tender cooked meat (mutton or rabbit is best), this should be minced up finely and used very sparingly. Occasionally put a pinch of fine grit or cuttlefish bone in with the soft food. Keep the birds in a basket or box half-filled with hay when first obtained, and in a few days transfer them to a cage. Feed every two hours, giving them just as much as they will eat without cramming, and do not worry if they do not take much at some of the meal times; they will make up for it on the next occasion. After each meal give just a little plain water on the end of the feeding stick. When they can feed themselves they can gradually be got on to such food as soaked puppy biscuits or Melox, with an occasional feed of the ordinary softbill food. Scraps from the table are good for them, such as vegetables, pudding, bread and milk, etc. A freshly killed mouse or Sparrow is very much relished and keeps a fine gloss on the plumage. A good big box cage, not less than 3ft. long, is suitable, but a small aviary is a capital place to keep a Magpie in, especially if it is near a doorway or where people are continually passing. Our Nutshell No. 26, 2½d. post free from this office or 2d. from your local newsagent, will tell you all about the feeding of the larger insectivorous birds.

HANDREARING ROBINS (S.A.).—A good food for handrearing Robins would be a mixture of hard boiled egg, homemade sponge cake and ants' eggs, live ones if you can get them, if not, best quality dried. This mixture should be made moist with new milk and the young fed every hour for the first two or three days, later every two hours. When taking the young of any bird I always try to manage to get them at night, after the old birds have crammed them with the last feed; they then start on the new food in the morning, and this I have always found agrees with them better than if commenced with during the day. Feed as early as possible, at the same time each morning, giving the last feed at sundown. They will not take much food in the middle of the day, but require to have fairly filled up crops morning and night. Put a pinch of grit in the soft food occasionally, and as the young ones grow add a little best quality insectile food to the mixture, gradually increasing it, because this will be their stock mixture when they grow up. You can, if you desire, make your own food for them in the following manner: Powdered Osborne biscuits, six parts; best ants' eggs and dried flies, two parts each; powdered silkworm pupæ, one part; meat meal, half part. This food should be make crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, or finely chopped lettuce, watercress, etc., or even cold boiled potato, varying it frequently and adding a few spots of water if necessary. To this or to your shop-bought mixture could be added occasionally a little hard-boiled egg. In addition he should have a few mealworms, beetles, caterpillars, etc., and various kinds of soft fruit; he will occasionally eat a little seed, particularly Canary. The Robin is a great bather, and in a wild state frequently has a dip just before roosting, but when caged it is as well to give him the bath earlier in the day. Our Nutshell No. 25, post free 2½d. from this office or 2d. from your local newsagent, would assist you.

FOOD FOR FINCHES (Camdeu).—A good staple food and method of feeding would be as follows: Canary 4 parts, teazle 2 parts, summer rape 1 part. This you could supply in a good large self-filling hopper. Then make another mixture of hemp, millet, niger and linseed, in equal quantities; give a little of this twice a week, and if you can procure some good wild seed mixture this could also be supplied 3 days a week, just a spoonful for each bird. This wild seed mixture is now put up by many well-known firms in very convenient packets, containing a good blend of seeds, among others, thistle, gold of pleasure, sesame, charlock, poppy, etc., and is exceedingly useful in assisting to keep Finches in prime condition.

ABOUT SKYLARKS (W. J. Townsend).—I very much suspect that your Skylark is a hen, or, if not, it is probably one of those inferior performers that one sometimes meets with, are practically useless as songsters. Now, although the Skylark is such an incessant songster when on the wing it does not follow that all of them are equally so when caged. Many of them never open properly, and it is only occasionally one manages to get a real good one. As a rule hand-reared birds can be depended upon more than caught birds, although many branchers turn out satisfactorily. I would advise you to give your bird its liberty. If it was going to be any good it would be singing stoutly now. If you can manage it why not handrear a brood; if not, buy half-a-dozen in the autumn, cage them up separately, and keep the best. (2) Canaries, like most birds, are very imitative, and will copy a few notes from any bird they hear; but the general character of the Canary's song is shrill and hard, and even if one copied the Nightingale's song, note for note, it would lack the mellow richness of the music of the King of Songsters.

YOUNG ROBIN (C.E.B.).—I fear you have been indulging your bird in a way that is not good for him, and if you continue the same treatment it will eventually cause its death. When hand feeding a bird it has to eat what is given to it, and it only requires a little firmness on the part of the feeder to see that it has what is good for it. You will have to gradually wean it from the meat diet. Make a mixture of hard-boiled egg, stale sponge cake, and ants' eggs, and at first give him some of this sticking on to the smallest possible pieces of meat. Wait until he is quite hungry, and I have no doubt you will soon manage to get him on to his proper food. For this see answer to another reader. Most birds feed themselves when a month old. Put a little food on the feeding stick, and tease him with it until he pecks at it, also leave just a morsel sticking to the bars of his cage.

ABOUT GOLDFINCHES (Nemo).—The Greypate is the Goldfinch in his nest feathers, these he casts in the autumn, mostly during August and September, but there is no fixed date. I have seen individuals in moult in July, also in November, although the latter were probably sickly birds that found a difficulty in getting rid of their plumage. When he is clean moulted he is in full dress, although, like most birds, he improves somewhat with each moult. (2) "Field-moulted" and "house-moulted" are terms used by fanciers to denote the place of moulting. A field-moulted bird is generally the richer in colour and has black legs; the house-moulted bird, i.e., one which has moulted in a cage or aviary, has pale-coloured feet, which get lighter at each successive moult. (3) October and November are about the best times to procure any of the Finches. (4) The Siberian Goldfinch is much larger than the British, and is only eligible for exhibiting in the Foreign Bird Section. (5) There will be no Siberian Goldfinches imported during the war.

GOLDFINCHES UNDER CANARIES (Devonian).—Give the old birds hard-boiled egg, sponge cake, and powdered biscuit. Procure a pound of best insectile food as used for feeding Nightingales and Warblers, and if you can manage to get your Canaries to eat this use it instead of the powdered biscuit. Try the Canaries with a little of it daily before the young ones are hatched; as a rule they will eat it readily, and if so, it is a capital food to assist in rearing all wild birds. Offer soaked rape seed; this should be placed in water over night, strained off and rubbed dry in a cloth in the morning. Another method of preparing it is to gently simmer it in a small saucepan. Keep the birds well supplied with all kinds of wild food, such as chickweed, shepherd's purse, and seeding grass, the latter cannot be given too freely; there are already some species in seed, and others will soon make their appearance if we get some sunny weather. Night and morning give a little crushed hemp and sunflowers. If you treat them in this way, giving as much variety as possible in their food, you should manage to rear them.

YOUNG BULLFINCHES UNDER CANARIES (W.F.D.).—I am very douhtful if you would he successful in rearing your young Bullfinches on the food your mention. You would do much hetter to follow the method advised to "Devonian" in rearing Goldfinches. If you are particularly anxious to try your soft food, supplement it with a good allowance daily of soaked seeds, also supplying the wild food as advised.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AMAZON VOMITING (Lindsey).—It is the tea sop, I expect, which has set up the trouble, and I much fear there is a probability of your losing the bird. Do not give any more tea sop. I take it it is eating seed fairly well. Give it a little boiled maize daily, about one tablespoonful (it only keeps fresh one day); boil till soft, drain off all water, then add 5 to 10 drops cod liver oil emulsion, stir with a fork, and supply to the bird as soon as it is cool. Instead of the drinking water, offer the following: One teaspoonful each Horlick's Malted Milk, and cornflour, and one drop of laudanum, well mix together in two tablespoonfuls of water, or a little more if too thick for the hird to freely sip up; prepare it fresh twice daily. Do not give a further aperient at present, and it would be well to put in case tray a fair quantity of sawdnst, or peat moss litter, so as to keep the tray as dry as possihle. The tray should he cleansed at least twice daily. As soon as the diarrhoea yields, cease giving the milk mixture, and give a mixture of tepid water, and chemical food, well colouring the water with the latter. You can encourage the bird to eat a little lightly moistened bread or biscuit, using chemical food and water as the moistening medium. It would he better to prepare your own seed mixture: 1 quart each giant canary seed and oats, one pint each sunflower seed, safflower, shelled pea nuts, wheat, dari, and hemp; well mix together, and keep a constant supply in the cage. Keep the bird in warm quarters, cage tray very clean, and report progress in about fourteen days, if the bird survives.

AILING GREY PARROT (E. E. Cleaver).—If I read your first query aright, there is constipation, if so, this must he got rid of by giving 3 drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the mouth every four hours till relief has heen given; then only occasional doses as required to keep the bowels moving freely, but there must not he a condition of chronic diarrhoea. Bathe the nostril twice daily with dilute glyco-thymoline till the obstruction is removed. I also advise the putting of a little honey and horax into the mouth sufficiently often to keep it clear of slime and from furring. Do not give the milk sop longer than you can help, but the bird must have sufficient to eat, and you must continue it till the hird is eating freely of the seed mixture again; prepare the milk sop so: several pieces of sponge cake about the size of walnuts, one-third of a teaspoonful of cod liver oil er ulsion, one teaspoonful of condensed milk, and sufficient boiling water to make the sop rather sloppy. Unless the bird appears to need a stimulant badly, I should not give any spirits, as from your details it appears to need a sedative. As soon as you have got the bowels moved, you had better give 3 grains of bromide of potassium in a little syrup, and repeat this dose whenever it appears unduly excited. You had better report progress as soon as the trouble hegins to pass, and supply full details, when probahly further help can be given. The sample sand enclosed is all right for an absorptive medium to cover up cage tray, but you should get a packet of parrot grit, Spratt's and other firms put it on the market. But as you have not heen giving proper grit for so long—you must only give a pinch occasionally, and let it gradually hecome accustomed to it. It will not be needed till the hird is eating seed again.

SOUTH AFRICAN "KING" GREY PARROT (Hibernia).—As you know your bird to be a South African Grey, it is of the colour variety to which dealers have given the name of King Grey. The extent and position of the areas of red or pink is very variable. I have seen one specimen that had the feathers almost alternately red and grey, and others with only stray red or pink feathers here and there. Its value, according to your description, should be anything you can get from £5 to £10.

ZEBRA FINCH WITH OVERGROWN MANDIBLE (Lallan).—So long as the heak continues to grow ahnormally, it must continually be cut hack. Keep a largish lump of mortar rubhish in the cage, also a piece of cuttlehone, and the hird may in future keep its beak ground down to normal size by pecking at one or hoth of these. There are very few books combining British and Foreign species. There are our Nutshells (see list in "Cage Birds), on various British and Foreign species, 2½d. each, also "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1s. 1½d., and "Aviaries and Aviary Life," 12s. 6d. The Editor would forward you either of the ahove post free at prices quoted.

OLD WAXBILL LUMPY (Mrs. Cole).—It looks more like a case of senile decay than anything else. Give it some seeding and flowering grass to pick over, and fasten a millet spray in the cage, renewing it when exhausted; continue to supply the canary and millet as heretofore. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intermediate days well colour the water with Chemical Food. Keep it where it can get light and sun, yet be free from draught.

GREEN AMAZON (W. Haddock).—The value is ahout 60s. to 100s., according to condition, plumage, health, etc. If the cage is cleaned daily, using sand to cover the cage tray, and scrubhed thoroughly over monthly, there should he no offensive odour from the hird. Many Parrots will not hathe, those that do are usually allowed to come out of the cage and indulge in a tub in a largish dish. A Parrot that will not hathe is usually sprayed twice a week during the warm months, and less often during the cold season. It will ho hest to continue to feed, as it had been fed heforo coming to you, and if it has been getting anything usnally considered unwholesome, then gradually wean it therefrom. A Parrot should not he given tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever.

COCKATIEL IN ROUGH PLUMAGE (J. E. Knight).—As well as the seed mixture, the bird should have regularly a supply of green food: lettuce, flowering and seeding grass, etc., according to the season; also grit and cuttlebone should continually be in the cage. Canary and white millet should be the main seed dietary; a few oats can be given twice a week. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in its drinking water for one day, and then turn it out into your garden aviary for the summer, where it can well remain till the end of October. The confinement to indoor and cage life, the lack of green food, etc., have all contributed to its present condition. It is a hardy species, and the best remedy is outdoor life; at any rate, for eight months of the year.

BIRDS FOR C.P. AVIARY CAGE (F. N. C.). I take it you have the British birds hy you. In a fairly confined space the Goldfinch often adopts a sort of "dog in the manger" attitude, but several seed hoppers will get over that difficulty. All the other birds you mention have heen associated with foreign species in a cage without mishap, and you should meet with no difficulty from adding them to your cage, save that, unless it's a very large one, it will be overstocked and strictest attention must be paid to cleanliness, and if the water-vessels get fouled at all, the water must be at once changed. Under any conditions, I should not keep more than twelve birds in the cage. If you elect to do this, let your choice of additions fall on the Bullfinch, Linnet, and the Canary-mule.

SEXING PLUM-HEADED PARRAKEETS (Omega).—The male has the head hright red suffused with plum-hloom on the hind head and cheeks; hlack mandihular streaks meeting a narrow hlack collar. The female is smaller, and has the head dull plum-blue, suffused with greyish on the cheeks, and forehead. She has neither the black mandibular streaks nor the hlack-collar; hut she has a yellow collar, which is rather broad on the sides of the neck. It is a thankless task fixing values at the present time, for, not only are hirds scarce, but buyers somewhat so also. Approximately the value of a pair in fair condition would be anything you conld get, from 60s. upward. When a species is rare in the market, the value is as much as you can get a would-be purchaser to pay, and in these war times this is modified hy the reluctance to spend money in hobbies and luxuries.

AMAZON PARROT WITH BROKEN FEATHERS (Lincoln Imp).—The hird is quite out of condition; prepare your own mixture of one part each maize, shelled monkey nuts, wheat, dari, and paddy rice; two parts each hemp, sunflower, and oats, and keep a small tin of canary and white millet in the cage. It should also have ripe fruit, biscuit, dry crusts, plain cake, etc.; but do not give table scraps, animal food, or tea and milk sops. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intervening days well colour the water with Chemical Food. Give it a little hoiled maize daily, boil about one desertspoonful till soft (grains should be left whole), drain off all water, add 10 drops of cod-liver oil emulsion, stir together with a four-pronged fork, give about this quantity daily till the bird is in condition again. Spray it with a tepid quassia solution twice a week during warm weather. Report progress about a month hence.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage hirds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each hird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead hird. Send hy letter post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

A. Red, Junr.—Fatty degeneration of the liver was the cause of death.

Hard Lines.—Parrot died as the result of fatty degeneration of the liver of some standing. The vendor no doubt was quite unaware of this condition, and may have sold the hird in quite good faith. It is a disease difficult to determine during life, and symptoms of illness only occur a few days or even a few hours before death.

Mrs. L. Brown.—Pneumonia was the cause of death, preceded by bronchitis, as exhibited by the symptoms you describe. It would not be communicable to your other hirds; it was, no doubt, a susceptible subject, and there was an inherent weakness in the young.

Thomas Kerr.—Peritonitis, due to infection from the oviduct.

W. B. Layton.—Enteritis or inflammation of the howels. A few drops of aromatic sulphuric acid in the drinking water daily.

MARRIAGE:

BEFORE-AND AFTER.

Should be in the hands of Every Adult—Married or Unmarried.

The publication of this work on Marriage is especially timely, in view of the startling evidence given before the Royal Commission on Divorce.

Skilfully the author guides his readers past the treacherous snares and pitfalls that lie about the path of the unwary wedded, and shows how they can be avoided, and marital comfort and enjoyment greatly increased.

He explains also how the result of following certain rules is seen in better home life, healthier offspring, and enhanced happiness.

Whilst in another part of this hook you are shown how to guard against those habits, which destroy love, and those hody-blighting sins of which married people know so much.

There is no room here to give the complete contents of this wonderful hook. It is sufficient to say that never before has such a hook been published dealing in such a straightforward manner with so delicate a subject. This book is at once a sensible, uncompromising treatise upon the most important subject in the world—"Marriage"—and the following extracts from letters received bear out to the fullest extent all that he publishers claim for it:—

"Thank you for prompt dispatch of 'Marriage: Before—and After.' I greatly appreciate the style in which the author has dealt with so delicate a subject, and believe him to be a public benefactor. —E.B."

"Many thanks for your book: it is most instructive and helpful. I have passed it on to a friend to read.—Mrs. J. C."

"Having read your book, 'Marriage: Before—and After,' I am very pleased with it. It speaks plain and straight.—H. H."

"I think much misery and distress would be saved if those married, and about to marry, read the good information in this book.—Miss G. H."

"It is a splendid book.—M. M."

"I must thank you for the prompt way you sent me your book, 'Marriage: Before—and After.' It is a book I shall always speak very highly of. It is so straightforward. A book that should be read by all. May God bless you in the good work of uplifting men and women. I only wish it could be known and read by many of our young people, whose lives are being ruined. Thanking you for the help your book has been to me. I am deeply grateful to you.—A. P."

"Many thanks for book. I consider it to be very useful.—W. J. P."

"In response to an advertisement appearing in a Home Magazine, I sent for your book, 'Marriage: Before—and After.' Let me now thank you wholeheartedly for the promptness with which it was sent—but, most of all, the information and valuable advice it contained. I forwarded it to my fiancée, and she wishes me to convey her gratification at the way you have handled a delicate subject.—R. P."

There is no shuffling or beating about the bush here, but a straightforward explanation of matters usually kept secret, an explanation which everyone can follow and understand, and which gives the most valuable assistance to all married couples and to all who are hoping shortly to merge their destinies into another's.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

NOTICE TO BIRD PURCHASERS.

It is advisable that all newly-purchased birds, especially foreign birds, be kept isolated from established stock for a week or ten days, until by their condition they establish the fact that they are thoroughly healthy.

I regret to state, writes Mr. H. Teat, Grantham, that I am compelled to give up the Fancy for the present, as I expect to enlist in a week or two. All my birds, cages, and various effects will be sold cheap to clear. Full particulars will be sent free, on application, as stated in my advert. in this issue. I thank you for past favours and wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

We have received from the Sec., Mr. A. Sutcliffe, 46, Hammond Street, Hopwood Lane, Halifax, the syllabus of the Halifax C.B.S. Theo Stewart; "Failures in Aviaries, and their lessons," by Mr. W. Shore-Baily; "My Yucatan Jay," by Lady Kathleen Pilkington, and "My Present and Past Aviaries," by J. W. Marsden.

Bravo! Kippax.

Two more of our members, writes Mr. R. Plows, sec., Kippax Linnet Club, have joined Kitchener's Army, so that, out of a membership of fourteen we have five with the colours. Not bad, is it?

OBITUARY.

MR. H. MAUGHAN (Jarrow).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. W. Ayres, sec. Jarrow and Hebburn C.B.S., that I announce the death of Mr. H. Maughan, of Jarrow, at the age of 47 years, after a short call. He was a man who was well liked among the Fancy, and had kept Canaries from boyhood. He has left two sons and two daughters to mourn his loss; one son is going to keep his father's Fancy going. To his widow and family we tender our deepest sympathy in their sad bereavement.

MR. BARNWELL, SENR. (Harrogate).

It is with deepest regret, writes Mr. J. H Walker, Chairman Harrogate C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the death of our esteemed secretary's father (Mr. Barnwell), who passed away on May 20 at the age of 65 after 15 months of awful suffering. Deceased was very highly respected by all who knew him, although not a bird fancier; his chief fancy was in the horticultural line. The members of the Harrogate C.B.S. wish to tender their deepest sympathy with our sec. and the whole family in the sad loss they have sustained.

Hand-rearing British Birds.

At this period of the year it is the desire of many to bring up by hand as pets the young of various kinds of British birds; and enquiries as to the proper method of procedure are frequently coming to hand. Two of such enquiries were answered by our British Bird expert, Mr. Norman, in the first two paragraphs of the British Bird columns, on page 298 of our issue of May 22, and those who purpose undertaking the rearing of nestlings would do well to mark these, or cut them out for reference. Fuller particulars than can be given in our query columns may be found in our various "Nutshells," particularly in Nos. 25 and 26

Another Indictment Against the Sparrow.

The writer of "Nature Notes" in the "Birmingham Mail," after saying that House Martins are yearly decreasing in number, thinks "there is no doubt the Sparrow is primarily responsible. It is another case of the survival of the most adaptable—one is reluctant to say of the survival of the fittest."

Wild Birds Protection Act. An Order for County Galway.

The Lord Lieutenant has made an Order that the killing, wounding, or taking of Blackbird, Bullfinch, Chough, Goldfinch, Linnet, Redpoll, Siskin, Skylark, Tern (all species), Thrush, and Twite, in the County of Galway is prohibited from the 1st day of March to the 1st day of December in each year.

Any Old Thing Will Do.

Two or three curious nesting places have been reported to us this week, says the "Bedfordshire Express." A Thrush has built its nest and deposited five eggs in an old disused trowel protruding from a wall. A pair of Robins have made their arrangements for a family in an old watering-can. At Chesfield a pair of Linnets have decided upon a sprouting brocoli to entrust their three precious eggs to, and several cases of nests and deposits in pea-sticks have been noticed.

How to Identify Tree Pipits.

No birds can be more safely recognised by their ways than the Tree-pipits, says the "Yorkshire Observer." These come to our woods in large numbers somewhere between April 24 and May 1, and in many places the males are to be seen continually springing from their lofty perches and soaring high, then often descending at times to the twig from which they made the ascent, but quite as often gliding on motionless wings, with legs stretched out behind, to a perch a little lower in a tree a short distance away. This is a very curious attitude for a passerine (Sparrow-like) bird to assume. Whilst they indulge in these short flights they sing in a voice as loud as and not unlike that of a Canary. It is a well-marked habit which one cannot confuse with that of any other bird inhabiting Yorkshire.

More Queer Nesting Places.

Strange nesting places are, of course, legion, but three of the records coming to hand this week seem to be especially worthy of note. A Thrush has built her nest in a wreath hanging on a tombstone in full view of visitors to the cemetery, at Westport, Ireland, a fold in a church curtain is occupied by a Robin's nest for the fifth year in succession, and at Kirkby Stephen a Wren is repairing for a second occupation her nest of shavings which she built last year within a couple of feet of the saw-bench in Messrs. Savage's saw-mill.

The Song of the Nightingale.

Poets and other imaginative writers have pictured the Nightingale as a sad bird doing penance by sitting on a thorn and pouring forth continuous sweet but doleful music. It is a curiously erroneous idea, for the bird has a remarkable resemblance to a Robin, and is by no means shy; it is easy to sit beneath a bush or tree in which it is singing. The song is not continuous, but varied and spasmodic, and frequently the sweetest notes—those long quivering strains of passionate ecstasy and plaintiveness which ascend the scale until one wonders how high the bird will reach—are followed by a low and by no means musical croak. The males apparently sing most of the night, and all the day. The wonder is when they find time to rest.—"Estates Gazette."

Didn't "Hanker" After Crow.

A correspondent, referring to the article by Bart Kennedy on "Bird Villains," which appeared in our issue of May 22, and to the mention of the Rook-shooting season, sends a cutting from "The Westminster Gazette" which says: "The Rookeries, except where the owners have gone for more serious shooting, are now being thinned, and during the next fortnight the resulting Rook-pies will prove a welcome addition to our 'war food.' Rook-pie is a peculiarly British dish, quite unknown on the Continent, but our working-classes are prejudiced against this national delicacy, which they dimly connect with the Carrion-crow. Yet the Rook feeds practically on the same fare as a Wood-pigeon. A legend relates that a labourer, given some Rook-pie, devoured the steak and other 'extras,' but set aside the chief ingredient with the comment: 'I can eat Crow, but I doan't hanker after it.'"

When OUR Day Dawns.

Perhaps the most remarkable aspect of bird life noticed during the war (says the "Derbyshire Advertiser") is the constant indifference shown by many of the commoner species of birds towards the continual roar of heavy artillery. During normal times many of these same birds would immediately fly for their lives at the near approach of any individual carrying or discharging a fire-arm. In the present case, however, familiarity seems to have bred contempt, for the birds seem to have become quite content despite their extraordinary surroundings, appearing to treat the constant gunfire as merely an actual everyday occurrence of Nature. Naturally the majority of the birds, especially those of a shyer nature, will leave the infected area for a quiet retreat some distance behind one of the firing lines extending across Belgium, France, Austria, and Poland, where they will no doubt carry on breeding operations as per usual. As the Allied armies advance on their way to Berlin the German lines will constantly become shorter, consequently many of the birds within the decreasing dimensions of the Hun's area will be forced back by the constant din of battle towards northern Germany or the coast of Holland, with the possibility that many birds will eventually arrive in England.

THE CRESTED CANARY AND ITS BREEDING.

By G. M. DAVEY (Plymouth).

Crests of the highest class command prices varying from £10 to £40, and up to £100 has been paid for sensationally good specimens. Our contributor deals with their production.

IT is my intention of leaving the old country for South Africa, and before I leave I should like to say a few words on the breeding of the Crested and Crest-bred Canary for the benefit of young fanciers and novices. The Crested Canary, as most fanciers know, takes its name from the topping or crest which covers its head. It was called in days gone by the "Topping," or "Turn-crown." I have been a fancier of this class of Canary for many years, and, if spared to return to the old country, I hope to make a fresh start, as I consider it to be the king of all fancies.

The aim of all breeders is to get as chubby a bird as possible, with massiveness of head and density and length of head feather, and the Crested Canaries of to-day are of a more made-up type than in the days of the old Norwich Turn-crown; in fact, we might almost call them freaks of Nature. The type has been so altered from that of the original that the word Norwich has been almost altogether dropped, and the bird is now simply called the Crest Canary.

The Points of a Perfect Crest.

In size a good crest should extend in front to the tip or over the tip of the beak, and reach round to the back of the head on the plane of the eyes, which should be almost if not entirely hidden. The most important features in the crest of the bird are size, shape, and density of feather, which should be broad and of a leafy texture. A small crest will make the bird's head look mean and spare, though a small head can carry a large crest and show it to perfection. I remember having in my possession a hen with one of the best crests I have ever seen, yet when her crest was off, her head was no larger than that of a Border. Therefore, we see it does not require an extra area of skull to hold the foundation of a well-feathered crest.

The shape is dependent on two things—a small centre, and the position of that centre, which should be sufficiently remote from the base of the beak to ensure a good frontage of regularly radiating long feathers, known as a good frontal. Nothing will compensate for a bad frontal, and any defect there is fatal. The centre which gives the neatest and best balance to a large crest is one immediately behind the eyes, in the centre of the top of the head, of course. If it is more forward, it takes greatly from the frontal crest; thus it is of great importance to study the position of the centre of the crest as well as other properties, as it assists either to mar or give a good finish. The back of the crest also is of great importance.

If a young Crest Canary be examined in the nest before there is any sign of feather appearing, there will be seen at the back of the skull, a scar-like mark, the rest of the head being covered with skin the colour of which shows the future colour of the feathers. In a young Dark Crest this bare skin is black. On the scar-like mark at the back of the head feathers never grow, and if the head is examined as the quills show themselves, it will be at once seen that they grow from every portion of the surface except this scar-like mark, which remains bare. The larger this scar appears, the greater the probability of an inferior back to the crest, which should cover this scar or naked spot entirely. A bird having only a small vacancy is said to be "well filled in behind."

What the Crest Should NOT Be.

A good crest should not stand up in front, and a dark one should show no light feathers over the beak or in any other part. It should not be narrow or pointed in front, neither should it be tucked at the sides, or it would have the appearance of being formed of two parts. It should not have any split or opening in the front, nor should the centre assume the shape of a line dividing one side from the other called by fanciers a "running centre." It should not be merely a heavy tuft of feathers, without any centre, falling smoothly over at back or front, nor should it be a mop. It should not be wider at the back than in the front; nor should it be rough at the back. It must not be thin or sparse, but must be dense and full of feathers radiating evenly all round from a well-filled, neat centre.

The Clear body Dark-crested is the ideal of all breeders. And if we take into consideration the difficulty of production, this is rightly so. The even-marked Dark-crest is also very difficult to obtain, and some breeders think should stand before the Clear-body Dark. There are rare instances of marked-wing birds, with the remainder of the bodies clear; also there is the Grey Crest, a most important bird in the breeding room, and not less important on the show bench. A good Grey is very pretty, although it has no recognised value from a colour point of view, and as a variety it is simply a chance result. It is rather remarkable that most Grey-crested Canaries are buffs; they generally have a clear body, perfectly free from any markings. Then there is the Clear Crest, which is a most beautiful bird, and I cannot see, as long as these have good crests, why they should not be more cultivated. Besides these there are the Green Crest and the Heavily Variegated, which is the first remove from the Green; both are most valuable in the breeding room.

Most Crest-breeders of the present day give very little thought to colour or markings, their whole craze being to breed a winner, not troubling a bit about colour. This is a blind policy on the breeders' part, as it eventually is bound to kill classification for the breed, and as the various marked and colour birds become more scarce, they will all drift into the one channel of variegation. If a variety is to flourish, it is the duty of the breeder to endeavour to fix the various markings and colours which have been produced.

And now we must consider the Crest-bred, which at the present time is just as important an exhibition bird as the Crest, although in the old days it was not recognised as such. The Crest-bred, like the Crest, should be of massive build, with a thick-set body, as near to the Bullfinch type as possible, with abundance of feather lying close to the body; of course, it is impossible to get it to lie as close as in the Norwich, owing to its great length.

The head of the Crest-bred is of most importance; in fact, a Crest-bred without really good head and head feather may scarcely be called a Crest-bred at all, no matter how much feather it has on its body. To get this point there are exhibitors who pair two Crest-breds together, and for this reason it is, I consider, very dangerous for a novice to buy a Crest-bred unless he is perfectly certain how the bird is bred, otherwise he may find that he breeds three times the amount of Crest-breds that he does Crests.

SOME HINTS ON PARROT KEEPING.

By The MARQUIS of TAVISTOCK.

Reproduced, by kind permission, from the "Avicultural Magazine."

YELLOW-COLLARED or Port Lincoln Parrakeet (Barnardius semitorquatus).—Typical examples have the lower breast pale green, and some red feathers at the base of the upper mandible, but intermediate forms between this species and P. zonarius are very common and are of no fixed type. The hen Port Lincoln is less easy to tell from the cock than the hen Bauer, and the sexes are alike in colour. Port Lincolns stay fairly well at liberty, and their loud whistling calls, unpleasantly noisy in a room, are most beautiful when heard at a little distance in the open air. Unfortunately, B. semitorquatus is a murderous fighter, and just as expert as the Bauer in inflicting beak injuries.

A Nervous Subject.

Pileated or Red-capped Parrakeet (Porphyrocephalus spurius).—This curious, aberrant Platycercine is, in spite of the fact that it is lively, striking in appearance and amiable in disposition, liable to bring its owner more anxiety and disappointment than satisfaction. Of all Parrakeets it is the most intensely nervous, and catching and handling it in the most gentle manner will often reduce it to such a state of prostration through sheer terror that its life may be seriously endangered. It also possesses in captivity an absolutely unrivalled capacity for catching fatal chills on the smallest provocation. It is therefore a wise precaution to remove it from the aviary in autumn and keep it in a roomy cage in a warm room until spring is well advanced, when it may be very cautiously hardened off. At the same time, Pileateds are, under certain circumstances, capable of withstanding cold, as is proved by the fact that I had a fine cock at liberty during the greater part of the winter of 1912 which kept in perfect health. Unfortunately, in February he strayed in search of a mate, lost his way, and quickly starved. Pileated Parrakeets would probably do well at liberty, as they are very dependent on artificial feeding, but the process of cutting their wings is so likely to prove fatal that one hesitates to try it with such valuable birds. Porphyrocephalus spurius is one of the very few Australian Parrakeets which will eat banana with any relish.

Psephotus Parrakeets.—A family of rather small Parrakeets of extreme grace and beauty, which spend a good deal of their time on the ground. The sexes usually present a striking difference in colour. The food should be the same as that provided for the Platycerci, and green stuff is most important. When tame they make gentle and affectionate pets.

Redrump Parrakeet (Psephotus haematonotus).—The best known member of the family. Very hardy when properly acclimatised, but not at other times, Redrumps would be charming birds at liberty were it not for the fact that owing to their small size they almost invariably fall victims to Owls before they have time to establish themselves. They stay remarkably well when released in pairs, but directly a cock or hen is lost its mate will invariably go clean away within two or three days if a substitute is not provided. Redrumps are very dependent on artificial feeding, and, unlike many of the true Platycerci, starve directly their supply of seed is beyond their reach. They may either be turned out with cut wings, or, if a pair in breeding condition are obtained, the cock may be released full-winged, and his mate (who must be kept within sight and hearing) allowed to join him after a few days. Adult Redrumps fight savagely with members of their own and nearly allied species. They are highly susceptible to septic fever.

Many-coloured Parrakeet (Psephotus multicolor).—Like the Redrump, able to stand cold when properly hardened off. Old writers describe this bird as a hopeless one to keep on account of its liability to die suddenly and without apparent reason from cerebral hæmorrhage. There is no doubt that Many-colours do sometimes succumb to this ailment on very insufficient provocation, but they certainly do not do so to such an extent that anyone need be deterred from trying them. They are, however, given to developing septic fever in the most inexplicable fashion, and the greatest care must be taken to safeguard them from possible infection. Like Redrumps they are very quarrelsome.

Hooded Parrakeet (Psephotus cucullatus).—This beautiful bird has been described as very sensitive to cold, but I have found that, provided it is well protected from draughts and cold winds, it is by no means impossible to winter it without artificial heat. It is, however, fatal to allow it to nest at a low temperature, as the hens are very subject to egg-binding, and many are lost from this cause. On leaving the nest the young of both sexes resemble the female in their sober coloration, though the young cocks always show a trace more blue on the cheeks and breast. Adult plumage is assumed during the course of the first moult, when the birds are about ten months old. Hooded Parrakeets are not quite so susceptible to septic fever as are their near relatives.

An Anomaly in Classification.

Blue-bonnet Parrakeet (Psephotus xanthorrhous).—A very aberrant Psephotus which really deserves to be placed in a genus of its own. Why this bird should be classed with species to which it has a very remote affinity, and that most typical Polytelis the Queen Alexandra Parrakeet separated from its two near relatives for the very insufficient reason that the adult cock possesses one primary feather somewhat peculiarly shaped at the tip, is one of the mysteries of scientific classification which are most difficult to account for. Cock and hen, Blue-bonnets are alike in colour, but the latter have rather smaller heads, and are less perky and assertive in their demeanour. Blue-bonnets are the hardiest of all Australian Parrakeets, and can safely be turned out of doors at any time of year. They are, however, highly susceptible to septic fever and Grey Parrot fever, the germs of which they cannot resist even when in the most perfect health and condition. In disposition they are excessively spiteful both towards Parrakeets and birds of other orders. When tame they make nice pets, but usually bestow their affections on one person only. When given their liberty they are apt to stray during the first few weeks, but after that they generally stay well. They seldom fall victims to Owls, and are able to live for many days even during the winter on what they pick up for themselves in the woods and fields. Blue-bonnets should be fed like the other Psephoti, but it is not wise to allow them much hemp unless they are flying at large.

Red-vented Blue-bonnet (Psephotus haematorrhous).—Differs from the common variety in the possession of red feathers under the tail and a reddish chestnut or maroon patch on the wings. Both kinds have a red patch on the abdomen. P. haematorrhous has little claim to be considered anything but a local variety of the common Blue-bonnet, and birds showing intermediate characteristics are often met with.

As Beautiful as Rare.

Neophemas Parrakeets.—These beautiful little grass Parrakeets are now rarely imported, and it appears only too likely that some of the most lovely species are nearly or quite extinct. They should be fed on white and spray millet, grass seed and canary seed. A few of the larger seeds will do no harm, but they seldom seem to care for them. Grass Parrakeets are very peaceable with other birds, but are rather more sensitive to cold than the platycerci.

Elegant Grass Parrakeet (Neophema elegans).—The largest of the group, and, like all its relatives, highly susceptible to septic fever. It is very fond of grass and other green food. The hen has less blue on the forehead than her mate.

Blue-winged Grass-Parrakeet (Neophema venusta), also called "Blue-banded Grass-Parrakeet." Very like the Elegant, but of a duller, darker and less golden green, and with more blue on the wing. The hen has much less blue on her forehead than the cock—often only the merest trace—and young birds are less blue on the wing than old ones. Gould asserts that in N. elegans the blue frontal band extends behind the eye, and in N. venusta it does not, but the distinction only applies to adult cocks, as I have seen no hen elegans in which the frontal band did not stop on reaching the eye.

An Opportunity Missed.

Turquoisine Grass-Parrakeet (Neophema pulchella).—A very distinct species in which the markings are different from those of its commoner green relatives. The cock is readily distinguishable from the hen by the possession of a small chestnut patch on the wings. The Turquoisine appears to be on the verge of extinction, a lamentable circumstance for which aviculturalists both in England and on the Continent are much to blame, as the bird was at one time freely imported, and bred so readily in captivity that it might easily have been preserved in a state of semi-domestication.

Bourke's Parrakeet (Neophema bourkei).—A fairly hardy little bird, rather less subject to septic fever than others of the genus. Some adult cocks have a broad blue band across the forehead, but in others this is nearly or entirely absent, and the sexes may be most difficult to distinguish as they are of exactly the same size. Bourkes, especially when young, are very apt to dash themselves violently against the sides of their aviary in moments of sudden panic, and all glass and wire netting affording facilities for this method of suicide should be protected by string netting or sacking. Bourkes are not so fond of green food as their near relatives, and a constant supply is not necessary when they are not breeding. Nesting pairs are best kept separate; I have had birds killed through fighting with others at this time.

New Zealand Parrakeet (Cyanorhampus novæ-zealandiæ).—A gentle and beautiful bird, now hardly ever imported. It should be treated like an ordinary Broadtail, but should not be exposed to too much cold.

Pyrrhulopsis Parrakeets.—A small genus of large, brilliant Parrakeets, all of which are rare in captivity. They should be fed and treated like the Aprosmicti, and a large supply of fruit is indispensable to their health. The sexes are much alike in colour. The Masked, Tabuan, and shining Parrakeets are the best known if not the only members of the genus, the two latter being much alike, but while the Tabuan Parrakeet has a maroon head and breast, in the Red-shining Parrakeet the maroon is replaced by bright crimson.

Here ends what we have no hesitation in describing as the most comprehensive article on Parrot keeping that has ever been written, and on behalf of our readers we tender our thanks to the author, the Marquis of Tavistock, and to the hon. editor of the "Avicultural Magazine," Mr. H. D. Astley, for permission to republish the very helpful information.—Editor Cage Birds.

The Craze for Size in Norwich Plainheads.

A Plymouth fancier, Mr. A. B. Brown, gives his views on this burning question.

I HAVE read the correspondence on "The Norwich Plainhead, and how to improve it," with disappointment, for in it I had hoped to see much which would aid the breeder, and especially the young fancier, in the development of his hobby.

I cannot see why the Crest-bred, the Lancashire Plainhead, or the Norwich Cinnamon should be necessary for the increase of size in the Norwich Plainhead, nor why these birds should be considered necessary to get large heads, better feather, increased colour, or any other quality, to improve the Norwich.

What was the cause of size in the Lancashire Plainhead, the Crest-bred, and the Cinnamon? Were they always such big, bonny birds? Did the grand Crests we see now-a-days get to such proportions in the natural course of events? How did the Cinnamon change his dull drab coat, and grow from a small insignificant, puny, red eyed, sickly specimen of a bird to one of seven inches long, stoutly proportioned, and a blaze of golden colour?

If the Norwich has deteriorated at all, we can be certain of one thing, it is not owing to judges who judge to the Standard, as set by the Southern Norwich Plainhead Club, but rather to the breeders who have not been sufficiently good in their judgment when pairing up their stock for breeding. Had the same care been taken in the selection of Norwich Plainhead stock birds as with the Lancashire, the Crest, Crest-bred, and the Cinnamon, by breeders who mated the birds year by year, in the gradual improvement or growth, there would now be no need for the correspondence deploring the degeneration of the Norwich Plainhead, and the desire of information for its improvement.

To those whose birds are lacking size I would advise a change of stock. There are plenty of suitable birds, but mind where you buy them. See they come from a breeder who has a good average of desirable birds. A reputation for good is not built in a day. And many winners have had no connection with the exhibitor previous to the show season.

If the fancier cannot see his way to pay for the ready-made stock bird, he should choose only the best of his own stock, weeding out all which do not approach a good standard of size, and in the case of other defects he should take the same drastic measure. If he has plenty of patience and skill, coupled with a strong will, he may by concentration on particular points, gradually improve his stock to such an extent as to be able to rely on a fair average of winners each season.

Why should any breeder throw away year after year in trying to breed six and half inches of Canary, out of two birds whose combined length is nine inches? It is all very well to argue twice four and half are nine. It will take many years of such argument to make this sum prove of value when estimating the size of the young when pairing up the future parents, and it is at pairing up time that the successful breeder has many such sums to work out before he can count on a fair measure of success.

However, should such a large bird be the result of pairing up small parents, care should be taken to select a suitable mate, and it is then more than likely that more non flights of this size will be available for the following season. The practice of mating only large birds should be persisted in until size is well established, and once this object is attained it is very unlikely the breeder would allow them to get smaller.

With regard to other points, I offer the same suggestion. Get your stock from a well known breeder who is reliable. As I stated, reputations are not made in a day. Pay a fair price for the use of his patient foresight and brain. It's no use bargain hunting in this class of goods: the best are cheapest. Failing this, breed your own, and patiently await development.

Size can be got quickly from the use of the Lancashire and Crest bred, but for one success there are many failures. I have no objection to showing a good Norwich against these big birds, providing it is in a class for stock birds, but I do object to showing a six and half inch Norwich, typical, good colour, and the correct angle, against a bird of any cross, or pure-bred Norwich, for that matter, which may be of equal merit in every way but half an inch, or a quarter inch bigger than the standard size for show birds.

My reason is this: the ambition of every breeder is to breed the ideal Norwich Plainhead, the size of which is governed by the Plainhead Club. When the birds are paired up, this six-and-half inches standard is in the mind of the breeder. Should he breed the ideal bird it should take precedence over any other not up to that standard, and I consider any bird exceeding that length should be penalised equally with the bird which fails to reach the standard. According to the rules, there really is no place for this giant beyond the breeding room, as he exceeds six and half inches in length.

The fancier who has used the outside cross to obtain size, and is successful with type and colour, I acknowledge as a superior breeder. His must have been a long, patient, uphill struggle, his disappointments manifold, and the results of each season must have been awaited with trepidation; anything expected, from Crest to horns, and many a forsaken nest.

I would warn the new beginner against adopting either the Lancashire or the Crest-bred cross. In the case of the Lancashire, big long birds are got, pale in colour, and with rough horny heads, beetling eye brows, and the abominations of the Norwich show themselves in round shoulders and dropped tails.

Place a good sized Crest-bred hen by the side of a good sized Norwich hen, compare the points as we desire them for progressive Norwich breeding, count up the cost, and the Crest-bred will be left to the Crest breeders for their sole use. It would take years of patient labour, and millions of sighs, before the desired colour could be obtained from these crosses, and we should be old, worn, and grey-headed, before we got rid of the loose under-tail coverts, slack thighs, etc. After all, we are not all of us permitted to lease the earth for three score years and ten of Canary breeding.

Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids.

The Young Doing Well.

SIR,—I am pleased to say that my Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids are still alive and doing well. They are now feeding themselves and the Blackbird is down on another 4 eggs. They are beginning now to show their parentage well and so far as I can see they will moult with a real Blackbird back and tail and the Thrush breast. I will be pleased to send you an account of the rearing and breeding for your next issue.

T. H. ANDERSON.

Campbell Street, Darvel.

SIR,—I have visited Mr. T. H. Anderson's aviary, Campbell Street, Darvel, and have seen the two Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids. Both are doing well, and appear in colour and markings to follow the male parent; they are nicely mottled on breast, with a tendency to show dark flights and tail. I am a frequent visitor to Mr. Anderson's aviary, both of us being members of the local Cage Bird Association, and I can vouch for the cross, as he has no male Blackbird on his premises.

ALEX. BEATON.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

Bird Villains.

SIR.—Apropos of Mr. Bart Kennedy's interesting article in CAGE BIRDS of May 22, I am sending you a copy of a letter written by a correspondent of the "Yorkshire Observer." It is as follows:—"A bird recognises in a Crow or Magpie a natural enemy. Its intentions are declared; it sails under the skull and crossbones. But the Rook has not yet got among the birds the reputation he deserves. If a Rook comes near, other birds do not mob it to try to drive it away. Their confidence in its honesty proves their undoing. A few years ago there was a Blackbird's nest in some pea sticks that leaned up against some posts and rails in my garden. I was rejoiced at its presence and refrained from using the sticks, although I needed them. A day or two after I saw two or three Rooks down in the shrubs of a neighbouring plantation. I investigated and saw a Rook fly out with a Thrush's egg in its beak. I at once thought of my Blackbird's nest, and presently saw a Rook perched on the post above the sticks looking down at the nest. No damage was done, for the bird was still sitting on her nest. I covered the most exposed approaches with wire netting, and after a time three of the five eggs were hatched. When the young birds flew I was at liberty to make use of the sticks and did so straight away. Thus the nest with its two addled eggs was soon exposed to view. My back had hardly been turned when those eggs were gone—a Rook had had them."

The Norwich Plainhead and How to Improve it.

SIR, In answer to Mr. Allsopp, I must say I cannot prove what he requires simply because scores of fanciers have introduced the Crest cross unknowingly, by purchasing specimens with the desired properties manufactured for them. If you ask such breeders about it they declare they have never had a Crest-bred in their room. Invariably, when you ask have they never purchased anything with more size and head properties, they say "Oh yes." But, Mr. Allsop, I can do the next best thing; I can prove they can be bred this way, and if you are ever in Birmingham I will show you a sample.

When Judges Disagree.

The Case of "White Rose."

SIR.—I have read J. W. Saywell's letter with wonder, for a more amazing set of exaggerations was surely never heard; that is putting it mildly. He has done a lot of lashing out, and not once hit the mark. J. W. S. says I am "beginning to climb down." How so? My letter was the first one I have ever written on the subject. He says he has had twenty years' experience. Then he must have started when in long clothes, judging by appearances. He keeps all kinds of birds from Linnets to Sunbirds; also Mules; also has bred Hybrids. Well, well, we live in amazing times. But, Mr. Editor, what has all this to do with "White Rose"? I can only repeat my previous letter; let us have opinions from Hybrid fanciers of experience.

MANSFIELD.

SIR,—I suppose many readers of these columns have seen the story of "White Rose" discussed before. Perhaps J. Craig may be a novice and only recently started taking CAGE BIRDS, or he may unfortunately be gifted with a short memory. If he has a copy of CAGE BIRDS for December 6, 1913 (if not, I think he can yet be supplied), that's a long time for some people with wooden spoons to remember, he will find a challenge from the undersigned for £5 to £50, and that is surely a sporting margin. Let Paddy have a trifle in, for he must be getting dry; but he isn't Irish, Mr. Saywell. He has not the pluck of an Irishman, and he doesn't have to spend so much train fare to see how much he can have in the supper. I never make a practice of putting all my eggs in one basket. Paddy may want a few, so I will leave it to the specialist clubs to appoint any number of judges, from 6 to 12, and there must be enough deposited to pay all the expenses of those selected. This challenge has never been cancelled; but don't neglect the Government work. Kaiser Bill may want a mascot before long. I will remember Paddy.

R. D. PARLETT.

SIR,—I trust you will again allow me to trespass on your valuable space in answer to Mr. J. W. Saywell. He thinks my letter was the limit; I can say that we in this town, and I am expressing the views of several other fanciers, thought the limit had been reached when he entered into this correspondence. I did not know he had the monopoly in this district, otherwise I would not have written. I can mention the names of eight known fanciers who can bear me out as to Mr. J. W. S.'s remarks at the time I stated. He states it would be difficult to find where he made anyone look small. In his letter he states "There are too many men posing as judges who don't know as much about birds as the exhibitors themselves," and later he states "At the next show at which it appears he should ask any schoolboy that happens to be in the show; he will certainly tell him." Well, on second thoughts I should not call this looking small, but an insult to our present day judges and a life-long fancier; but Mr. J. W. S. is not consistent, as in another paragraph he asks "Does he think they (the judges) have not the courage of their own convictions?" If his judgment, after twenty years, is equal to his contradictory statements, the Fancy will well know the conclusions to be drawn from his letters. I should like to ask you, Mr. Editor, would it be possible when the next show season comes round to get several of the B.B. and M. Club judges to examine the bird, with Mr. Parlett's permission, and send you their written statements for publication in your extensively read paper. I should just like to mention in conclusion that I have several pairs matched up in the way it is stated the parents of White Rose were matched, and I only hope I may be successful in breeding another "sensation."

HYSON GREEN.

When Was the First Open Show?

SIR,—In the report of the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.A. my old friend Mr. Clegg is reported to have said that the first open show held at Manchester was in 1883. This is not quite correct, for I myself exhibited at a show held in the Cotton Waste Exchange, Manchester, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 31, 1874, and January 1 and 2, 1875. The show was got up by fanciers from Manchester, Rochdale, Oldham, and surrounding towns. Each member, and I was one of them, paid 26s. Mr. W. Evans, Lower Broughton, Manchester, was the Secretary, and the judges were J. Beeson, Derby, and J. Gough, Huddersfield. I am sorry to say the show was a great failure, chiefly owing to the weather, for three more miserable show days I think I never saw. We lost all the money we had paid, and more besides, so there were no more shows held under the share system. The show was open to competition for the United Kingdom. There were 35 classes in all, but there were no novice classes in those days. This being the first All-England show I exhibited at, I kept the catalogue, and have it at the present day

LEVI BUTTERWORTH.

The Evolution of Birds.

SIR.—Some months ago a discussion (in which I took part) took place in the columns of CAGE BIRDS, regarding the reptilian origin of birds. I was to-day reading the work "Bird Life," by the well-known naturalist, Mr. Pycraft. The book is not altogether free from inaccuracy, but the concluding chapter is very interesting, and I would heartily commend it to all who were interested in the problem.

As far as I remember, the opponents of the theory of evolution maintained that no process that mankind has not actually witnessed is worthy of serious consideration, and that birds and reptiles could not be nearly related, because the modern representatives of the two orders will not interbreed. It might as reasonably be maintained that coal is not derived from antediluvian forests because mankind never saw those forests growing, nor witnessed the process of their fossilization; or that a toy Pomeranian dog and a St. Bernard have not a common ancestor, because they cannot interbreed successfully. It is in the highest degree improbable that any modern reptile would breed with a reptile of the Jurassic period, any more than a bird could, but that does not alter the fact that modern birds and modern reptiles are both descended from creatures unmistakably reptilian, and from which, during the process of ages so immeasurable that the history of mankind is but as a day in comparison, they have become so altered by various modifying forces of climate, environment, etc., as to be incapable of hybridization either with each other or with their progenitors. When we bear in mind the fact that owing to artificial selection (which is a distorted and modified form of evolution) certain breeds of domestic animals are wholly or practically incapable of inter-breeding either with each other or the wild parent stock, we can easily understand how the changing and modifying forces of nature can in an infinitely longer period bring about a rather similar result. For evidence of the changes which took place we have the fossilized remains of the creatures which inhabited the earth at different periods of its history.

E. K. WELLS.

[We have published the above letter, as the subject, when it was being discussed in our columns, aroused very considerable interest. It took up so much space, however, that we had to hold over several letters upon the matter, and we think it was so fully dealt with that it would not be advisable to re-open the discussion. Readers would do well to consult the work mentioned by our correspondent.—(Editor).]

SITTINGBOURNE C.B.S.

Annual ramble, May 23. A fairly good number turned up, and weather was grand. Not many young were found, but plenty of nests with eggs. First find went to Mr. Copping, a nest of young Thrushes. Second find to Mr. Ivory, nest of Pheasants' eggs; third, T. Monday, nest of Linnets, four eggs. Many other nests were found, and altogether we had a very enjoyable ramble.—T. Monday, Sec.

EAST HAM C.B.S.

On Sunday, May 16, the members had their annual ramble to Laindon. Again there was a very good muster and well over a hundred nests were inspected containing eggs and young birds of different ages. Among the most notable finds was a Nightingale sitting on three young ones, its mate a little further away filling the air with its lovely song. After a good tramp the members returned to the Laindon Hotel, where a hearty meat tea was enjoyed. After tea an impromptu cricket match was indulged in, the Norwich men beating the British and Border men by 62 runs to 34. We then went back to the Hotel and had a musical evening before returning to East Ham, having had one of the best outings since the Society began. Special mention must be made of our host, Mr. Holman, who made us very comfortable and greatly added to the pleasure of the party. The Secretary would be glad to hear from intending members at his address, 34, Dorset-rd., Katherine-rd., East Ham, where full particulars can be obtained.—F. Onslow, Hon. Sec.

PLYMOUTH W.C.O.S.

Ramble to Awns and Dendles, May 9. The party, consisting of 26 members and friends, met at Millbay Station, then by motor to Cornwood. A walk along the road gave them an opportunity to search the hedges for bird life, and the first nest to be noticed was that of the Blackbird. After entering the Awns and Dendles the nests of Linnets, Finches and Tits were to be seen, and an argument took place as to the builders of the nests in the arm of a tree with very small eggs, something like those of the Wren. During a repast, to which full justice was done, the toast of the W.C.O.S. was proposed hy Mr. Craven, seconded by Mr. Lugg, who dwelt on the benefit of these rambles, giving an insight into Nature for further use in the birdroom; and a presentation was made to the worthy Chairman (Mr. French), who, in a few well chosen words, responded to the toast. Further walks completed a very enjoyable day.—W. Luscombe.

WEST BROMWICH C.B.S.

The annual ramble, May 16, was participated in by seven members only; this, no douht, was caused hy the demands on munition workers, and incidentally the weather, which was very unpromising when time for starting came; though fortunately it cleared later and was ideal. Mr. Jefferies, Harborne, of Nightingale fame, was the conductor, and right well did he succeed. As the ramble was in conjunction with the lecture on British birds given before this society, it proved most instructive. Our destination was Alberley Valley, Bewdley, Arley and surrounding districts. Arriving at Kidale Station we were met hy Mr. Jefferies and two other fanciers, Mr. Gibbon and friend. Then hy waggonette to the valley, where bird life was in abundance. The first rare find was a Whinchat's nest with five eggs; this nest took more than five minutes to find after we had seen hen leave the place. It was built low to ground and covered with dead leaves, and had the hen stuck to her post it would have been almost impossible to locate. It was some time before any other nests were found. Linnets' nests were in galore, and another interesting find was a Stonechat's. A move was then made to Arley by a circuitous route through Trimperley, and here again bird life was abundant and many nests of various species were located, some with young and eggs in various stages. A rest was called and refreshment taken in an orchard with trees in full blossom, giving enjoyment to all. A Wren was here noticed building her nest in a thick creeper. Another move was made for Arley. This led through beautiful wooded scenery with all sorts of bird life, and a most interesting and instructive part of the programme occurred here. Ant-hills were in abundance, and our guide explained the method of collecting their "eggs." He estimated that it would be possible in one day alone in those particular woods to gather enough to last a fair number of birds the whole season. Then came the tit-bit of the day, viz., the locating of the Nightingale, which we were very fortunate in doing. This occurred at Arley, on the river side, and he was good enough to give us a song, but we were disappointed in not finding his nest, though our guide was most anxious to locate it. From here onward was a walk of a mile and half along the riverside, and here again our guide came in; he pointed out many interesting nests which he had located the previous week-end, including Nut-hatch, Tree-creeper, White Owl, Willow Wren, Blackbird, Thrush, and others. Arriving at our destination for tea, a real good meat tea was laid ready, and right well did the party do justice to it. Whilst partaking, we again heard the Nightingale's Song. This time it was by phonograph, and for sweetness not to be compared with the little brown songster's own notes. When a start was made for home unfortunately the weather broke down, but everyone was pleased with the outing. The best thanks of the members are due to Mr. Jefferies for the able way he made all arrangements. Anyone who would wish to join Mr. Jefferies in one of his rambles would be welcome; no more instructive and pleasant tutor would be possible; his address is 1, Vicarage Road, Harborne.—W. G. Andrews, Hon Sec.

SOUTH LONDON COL. AND F.A.

Meeting, headquarters, May 13, Mr. G. A. Jeffreys chair, and a fair number present. A considerable amount of business was got through before we arrived at the tit-bit of the evening, viz., a lecture on "Canary Management," by Mr. J. S. Fairman, the well-known breeder and exhibitor of Yorkshires. Mr. Fairman proceeded to explain his methods in a manner which proved he was master of his subject, taking his audience through the various seasons, and crowding a lot of useful information into the short time at his disposal. A very hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Fairman, to which he suitably feplied, and a very pleasant and instructive evening came to a close.—Geo. Burton, Hon. Sec.

MANCHESTER (Central Social Club).

Social and supper, May 8, 32 Victoria-st., City. A large number of members (and better-halves) and friends turned up and were entertained to a capital programme. The artists were of the first water. Mr. E. Fulcher took the chair, a position which he admirably carried out. The concert was opened by Mr. F. Kott with a selection on the piano followed by Mr. C. Welsh (baritone), Miss Turner (soprano), Mr. F. Meadowcroft (humourist), Mr. Riley (accompanist), Miss L. Welch (contralto), Mr. Schofield (tenor), Mr. Griffiths (concertina solo). The company then adjourned for supper, at which ladies were treated to an unusual experience, being waited on by the gentlemen. Special mention must be made of the waiters, Mr. W. Turner, with a knife in one hand, spoon in another, and a plate of boe potato-pie in the—sorry, he passed it on to Messrs. Lewis, Critchley, J. James, H. James and some other members, who were so active that their names have got omitted from the list of "waiters." We were very pleased to see our Mr. W. Smith snatch a few minutes from business and give us a look in for a song or two, and, of course, his supper. (His better-half's turn next time!) Mr. H. Clayton gave a lady's hat to be drawn for by the ladies, and Miss Turner was the fortunate winner. The singing of "Auld Lang Syne" concluded a most enjoyable programme. Afterwards we made several new members.—R. J. Metcalfe, Sec.

EAST HAM C.B.S.

On May 13, Mr. Robson lectured on "General Management of the Bird-room." There were a good many members present, and all thoroughly enjoyed the lecture and took notes of the hints that were given. Among the most important ones were the filling up of nests from one where there were only one or two young birds, and thus leaving free the parent birds to lay another clutch. The feeding of the young and the giving of greenstuff were discussed, and after numerous questions had been asked and answered the lecturer was accorded a hearty vote of thanks.—F. Onslow, Hon. Sec.

EAST HAM F.S.

Meeting May 20. Members and friends were entertained to a pleasant and instructive lecture by Mr. Gardner, who dealt fully with the value of in-breeding as a means to attain, in conjunction with face value, a specimen fit to show at any exhibition. Resolved that an egg collection on behalf of wounded soldiers in East Ham Hospital take place on Sat., May 29; all members are asked to make the collection a success. Second monthly show, Earl of Wakefield, May 29, exhibits staged 4.45. Show open to the public free at 6. During the evening silver spoons won at first monthly show will be presented by Mr. C. E. WEST STANLEY C.B.S.

Meeting, May 15, when a few old fanciers got together and resolved to carry on this old-established society, as it would be a pity to see it go down, as it is situated in such a big district with crowds of birdy men. We have a grand hall for a show, a splendid cup to be competed for with 3 nominated young birds, and scores of specials to be had just for the asking. The Society is in entirely new hands, who intend to make it go. Mr. G. F. Bates was elected chairman and W. Cresswell Sec. The sub. is 4/- per year and 1/- to join. We would like to see all old members each bring a new one to next meeting, June 12, to select a date for Annual Show and nominate judges.—W. Cresswell, Sec., 34, Doverterr., South Moor, Stanley, Durham.

BURNHOPE C.B.S.

Meeting, May 15, Colliery Inn, Mr. C. Mitchell chair, and a good turn up of members and friends. Decided to hold Annual Show, Dec. 18. Judges nominated: A. Holden, A. Brown, W. Reid, J. Hands, H. Seely, J. Riseborough. Decided to have two Table Shows, the first to be held June 12, at the club-room, Burnhope, Mr. G. Lane judge. Classes: Nor., Bord., Yorks., A.O.V. Can. all 1915, Canary (old bird), Linnet, H. or F.M., Redpoll, A.O. Hardhill, A.V. Softbill. Birds staged at 4. Mr. Lane entertained us by putting 3 birds through the wash and gave some useful hints which were thankfully received. He was also fired with a volley of questions which he ably answered, and closing time brought a very enjoyable evening to an end with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Lane.—J. W. Robson, Sec.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

Meeting May 4, St. Thomas's Schools, Ardwick, Mr. A. E. Thorpe presided over a good attendance. After the election of two new members, other business was deferred to next meeting. The chief attraction was a lecture by Mr. J. W. Cutmore (Liverpool), entitled "British Birds that are kept by Avieulturists and Fanciers," illustrated by a large collection of skins of British birds, many of which had taken premier honours at shows for their previous owners. He described the way to skin a bird, also the treatment of the skin to preserve it for many years. He showed the variation of the plumage in the different seasons both in the wild state and those moulted by fanciers. Mr. Cutmore mentioned the Finch family separately, and incidentally touched upon the House Sparrow, Tree Sparrow, Wild Canary, Serin Finch, Snow Buntings, and many softbills. After an interesting lecture many questions were dealt with by Mr. Cutmore, and a vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer.—J. Spencer, Hon. Sec.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting May 6, headquarters, Duke of York. Mr. J. A. Tonks presided over a good attendance. The chief item was a lecture on the Norwich Plainhead by Mr. F. J. Weaver, and those who were not there missed a treat. The lecturer said he would give no note whatever of bird-room appliances, as he said those could be got by looking through CAGE BIRDS. He said Norwich 10 years ago were more even than they were at present, being very typical, but on the small side, so fanciers should set about to improve them. Judges have been in a difficult position for three or four years, but now, he was pleased to say, birds on the show bench are bigger and better than they ever have been. He also touched on the two yellow cocks exhibited by Mr. P. V. Williams, as from what he has learnt both are pure Norwich bred. He said there is still something lacking now in the bird, that is alertness, which used to make the Norwich most attractive in the show room. Mr. Weaver said working men were better placed to-day than they were 10 years ago in getting up a strain, as there were many good fanciers in the Midlands who were willing to give novices a start, and at a low figure, too. Many questions were asked, all of which were splendidly answered and explained. The lecturer pointed out to the novices what "depth" really was, and told them to steer clear of birds with bad heads, long flights, long sides and kinked tails. The most essential point of a show bird is to be well trained. On summing up he gave his real tit bit in saying that nothing beats a good little one better than a good big one. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer brought a pleasant evening to a close.—J. Gibbon, Press Correspondent.

HUDDERSFIELD O.S.

Meeting May 15. A very instructive lecture on the ailments of Canaries was given by one of our oldest members, Mr. W. Gledhill. There was a good muster present, and all were well satisfied with the way the subject was dealt with. Two new members were elected, making us now 62 altogether.—A. Lawford, Sec.

OXHILL (Central Workmen's Club) C.B.F. AND F.S.

Meeting. Mr. R. Rowell (Bebside) was elected to judge cage birds at annual show Jan. 15-16. We have a good hall capable of holding some 300 exhibits, and with a little more light the exhibits could be shown to great advantage. Since our last show several members of the Club and Institute have been elected, and this should be beneficial, as our show is confined to members. I think it would be wise to consider the advisability of having two or three open classes.—Wm. J. Platten, Sec.

PLYMOUTH W. COUNTIES O.S.

Meeting, May 18, Oddfellows' Hall, Morley Street Mr. French chair. A pleasant evening was spent in asking and answering questions, some very instructive questions were put to the members, and the answers should be of great value to all present. Arrangements for N.F. show, June 2, were made. Classifications: Yell. Yorks., Buff do.; Yell. Nor., Buff do.; Crest and C.B.; Yell. Cinn., Buff do.; A.O.V. Can.; Light Mule, Dark do.; Goldf. or Bullf.; Linnet, Siskin, etc.; A.O. Seedeater; Insectiv.; Large For., Small do. Judges: Yorks., Cinn., and A.O.V., Mr. Cheney; Nor., Mr. Pope; Crest and C.B., Mr. Gill; Mules, Brit., and For., Mr. Pridham. Birds staged 7.30. One new member was elected. A vote of thanks brought the meeting to a close.—W. Luscombe.

FOREIGN BIRD EXHIBITORS LEAGUE.

Annual meeting, May 12, El Vino Cafe, Piccadilly Place. A fair gathering of enthusiasts attended, including Miss Lydia Clare and Mrs. B. J. Moore, Messrs. Cooper, Dewhurst, Frost, Frostick, Mannering, Maxwell, Robson, Shepherd, Shipton, Silver, Townsend, Trower, Wade, and Wynn. Voting results were read, and the new officers are: Treas., Miss Lydia Clare; auditors, Messrs. Cooper and Mannering; chair, Mr. Trower; committee, Mrs. Thynne, Messrs. Dewhurst, Frost, Frostick, Maxwell, Robson, Schluter, Shepherd, Shipton, and Townsend; hon. sec., Allen Silver, F.Z.S., 303, Streatham High Road, S.W. Provincial committee includes Miss Bousfield, J. Goodchild, F. Howe, J. C. W. Meadows, Col. Routh, R. J., C. H. Row, L. M. Wade, and R. J. Watts. Patrons and other office holders as before. Mr. Shepherd was thanked for his offer to provide a meeting room, and Mr. Frost for his offer to provide artist's fee in case of a show prize card design. An addition to the show rules was made to the effect that no show can be granted support that will not guarantee to pay prize money within 21 days of the show. Balance-sheet and show report accepted, and a considerable amount of business completed. In addition to paying their share of the loss on the joint show at Horticultural Hall, amounting to £14 2s. 3d., the League paid out £7 19s. in special prizes, and expended in one season, solely in the interests of foreign bird exhibiting, no less than £42 3s. 6d., an amount which has not been spent by any other society before on this branch of the hobby. At present it is almost impossible to hint as to the programme for next season, although it is pretty certain, should the war come to a close this year that next year a summer as well as a winter club show will be held. Members are asked to in no way relinquish their interest in the work of the society, and whenever possible to obtain new members. A hearty vote of thanks to retiring officials was unanimously passed.

LONDON AND P.O.S.

Meeting at headquarters, with a lecture on Foreign Birds by Mr. A. Silver, F.Z.S. Birdkeepers, he said, fight shy of foreigners, thinking they are expensive and hard to keep, whereas the ordinary Canary breeder could keep in perfect show condition a nice collection of foreigners at no greater expense than Canaries, the main features being common sense, good judgment, and avoidance of fads. There is an endless scope for variety, new species in normal times being imported every year, and most birds increase in value considerably after being kept a short time, some realising double their original cost. It is best for bird-keepers to become friendly with others interested in the hobby, thus getting the benefit of their experience, which is better and more instructive than book reading. Water Fowl, Quails, and many Partridges could be kept in suburban gardens and exhibited with ease. The nicest Parrots to keep were the Broad-tailed and Love-birds. There is no more brutal bird, especially to its own species, than the Lavender Finch; the Thrush group were also very aggressive. Virginian, Pope, and Green Cardinals supply action, colour and song, and are hardy and easy to cater for. Fly-catchers and Chats make most delightful pets; Tanagers supply colour, but no song. Typical Starlings show wonderful sheen and colour; no song, but plenty of screams. Mynahs have considerable conversational powers, and are not difficult to keep. Humming Birds are too expensive and difficult to keep for the taste of ordinary bird-keepers, although they had now been kept in this country for over twelve months by one of the most respected members of this Society. Woodpeckers, Nut-hatches, etc., are lively and handsomely coloured, but have not much song. The Eastern Nightingale and Shamah are both lovely songsters. The typical Mocking Bird has a marvellous song, but it is difficult to get a cock bird; Rock Thrushes are good singers. The Wilson and Hermit Thrushes, Canadian, have a glorious song, Wilsons being called the Swamp Angel owing to its beautiful song. Beautiful coloured plates illustrating the birds that Mr. Silver had spoken of were passed round, and many expressed the desire in the near future to go in for Foreign bird keeping. This brought a very interesting evening to a close. Next meeting, June 17th; young stock table show, with classes for British and Foreign, 6d. entry, returned as prizes on sliding scale. Special prizes have kindly been offered by Messrs. Crabb and Hodder. Any other member wishing to offer a special please let me know by June 7, so as to be in schedule.—H. L. Huggins, Hon. Sec.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

CAUSE OF UNFERTILE EGGS (R.W.P.).—I do not quite understand what you mean by "ramping" the foot, unless you mean cramping. But even then I do not see how this can be responsible for the unfertile eggs, which are far more likely to be due to the cocks not being in very vigorous breeding condition, which, again, may be due to the rapid and extreme fluctuations we have had this season so far. As regards the feet bleeding, you should see that the perches are made of a nice soft pine wood, and of a suitable size for the birds to grip comfortably. Also bathe the feet once daily for a few days in a warm solution of extract of wych hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of warm water. After bathing for a few minutes, dry them, and sparingly anoint them with boracic ointment. You may also add ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda to the drinking water every second day for a week. To each pair, when they are going to nest again, give every second day a teaspoonful of egg food with about half this quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it, and on the intervening days give a growing stool of dandelion, the whole crown cut off just below the surface of the ground.

MRS. BERNARD & J.A.—Replied to by post.

STILL THICK AT TIMES (J. Smith).—The bird seems to have made some progress, seeing that she now has these intervals of activity, but it is useless thinking of mating her as long as she sits thick from time to time. As a matter of fact I doubt if she will be of any further use as a stock bird. Anyway, vary the treatment advised in last reply, and see what a week or two of this will do for her. Continue the same general treatment, but instead of the bread and milk give every second day a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days give a stool of dandelion, or a liberal supply of dandelion seed heads. In the drinking water add 20 drops of Chemical Food about every third day. Offer the bath four times a week now that the weather is more reliable, provided the bird does not appear badly affected after bathing. You might also examine the feet to see if there is any soreness, and if there is, treat them in the same way as advised to "R.W.P." in this issue, and also see that the perches are quite suitable.

...LAYING SOFT EGGS (Norwich Plainheads).—The hens are clearly thoroughly out of condition, and I doubt if they will ever be of any use for breeding stock. Your feeding is not correct, and may be a predisposing cause of the condition of the birds, though I fear there is something more than the dietetic error accountable for the whole condition. The first thing you should do is to look well into the conditions in which the birds are kept, and see that they are bright and well ventilated, free from damp and extreme fluctuations, and conducive to good health generally. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition, give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp (see that it is sound and sweet in the kernel), millet, niger, and teazle. On the alternate days for the next few weeks give a morsel of bread and milk or half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. Give a fairly liberal supply of seedy chickweed, the tender tips of young groundsel, or watercress, but carefully avoid giving these birds dandelion at all. In the drinking water add 20 drops of Chemical Food four times a week for a month or so. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in the cage for the birds to peck at, and when the hens are about nesting again get a little old mortar and mash it up to a coarse powder, and strew it about on the cage floors on top of the covering of gritty sand.

AN OLD FRIEND (H. Jackson).—You might find details for exterminating red mites given in this column every few weeks for years past. Here it is again. Neither insect powders nor quassia alone are of any material use for this purpose. The mites harbour in and about the cages, and do not live on the bird. Consequently, the cages, not the birds, are the most important things to deal with to exterminate the pest. This should have been done before the birds commenced breeding, in the case of breeding stock, as it is not possible to do it properly now on account of disturbing the birds. The birds should be transferred to a temporary cage, and whilst there given a bath daily in which a few drops of essence of quassia has been mixed. Then thoroughly clean the cage inside and out, probing any open joints, cracks, or holes, with a pin, if necessary, on to a sheet of paper, and at once burn the rubbish. Next saturate it all over with a solution of camphor in paraffin, an ounce of the former to a half pint of the latter, using a small paint brush to work it well into the joints, crevices, etc., and place it in the open air to dry. Next day repeat the operations, and preferably repeat it all over again on the third day. Then when dry repaint, enamel, or distemper, as the case may be, the inside, and touch up the outside, and when the inside is quite dry you may return the bird. For some time after, touch the ends of the perches and any likely harbouring places with essence of quassia twice a week. Do not omit treating the nail, hook, or what it may be on which the cage is hung. If you do not mind renewing the stain and varnish on the cage you would find methylated spirit as a substitute for the paraffin much better.

HEN NOT FEEDING (Trier).—Next time the hen goes to nest leave the cock with her and see if she is any better at her duties in those circumstances. Possibly she will feed the young all right next time, and some hens will always feed better when the cock is with them, if they are indifferent feeders when he is absent. When the young are hatched give a small quantity of equal parts egg yolk and stale bread crumb, and sprinkle it lightly with maw seed. After the first day gradually bring the composition of the soft food to equal parts egg, bread crumb, and crushed sponge cake. Give a little spray of freshly gathered green food morning and afternoon from the second day, and gradually increase the quantity as the young get older, and also give it three times a day if convenient. If the hen shows signs of not feeding the young under these circumstances offer a teaspoonful of soaked summer rape every day, and also offer a bath in which you have dissolved a little common salt—sufficient to make the water taste faintly saline. If these methods fail I am afraid there is no other course open except transferring the young to another hen that will feed, or rearing them by hand.

YORKSHIRES OUTDOORS (H. H. M.).—Yes, it is quite possible for Yorkshires to be kept in a double-boarded shed out-of-doors all the year round, but it is desirable that birds for this purpose should have bred and reared prior to being turned out in normal conditions of temperature. But even the latter condition is not absolutely essential if the birds are first turned out about May, when the dregs of winter are past. In such circumstances, when it is not desired to breed, it is best to allow the birds freedom to fly at liberty. A covered-in portion is useful during the cold, wet months of winter, but if the shed does not include such a part, it would suffice to hang up a few large cages, with the doors fastened open, and the fronts partly covered, for the birds to roost or shelter in, if they wished to seek shelter from the cold, though they would probably not "turn a hair."

A SQUATTER (Abnormal).—(1) The ovary of this hen is in an abnormal condition, possibly in an exhausted state from overwork last season. In any case it is just such a case that might be corrected by being able to complete a breeding cycle. Therefore, I would advise you to put a clutch of fertile eggs under her and allow her to incubate them and bring up the young in the ordinary way. After doing so it is quite probable that she will nest in a normal manner on her own account. (2) The sample of hemp is stale and rancid, and quite unfit to feed any class of Canaries, or indeed any other bird. The teazle is a fair sample, but it has rather a lot of "frass" remaining on it, which, however, is not an unusual thing with this seed, and although it looks somewhat disproportionate to the bulk of the seed, it really weighs exceedingly light, and is therefore not so much loss to the weight as may appear on a casual sight. But 90 per cent. is enormously greater than the proportion of waste that appears on the sample. If you mean that the birds waste that amount, then give only a pinch now and again as a change. It is not absolutely essential, if the birds have no taste for it, as I should say was the case with yours if they wasted it to the extent you name.

RETURNING THE COCK (Bosco, Watford).—The proper time to return the cock depends to a great extent upon the condition of the hen. You must keep an eye on her, and if you see that she is coming forward for laying again when the young are about three weeks old, as she did last year, you may return the cock in the evening when the young are a fortnight or up to seventeen or eighteen days old. Do not return him until you are fairly certain that the hen is about laying again soon, and after returning him keep a sharp eye on him to see if he molests the young. He may possibly take things as a matter of course and take over a share of feeding the brood, but on the other hand if he seriously molests them they will be old enough to be placed in a nursery and hung on the wires of the cage in such a position that the parents can reach them to feed them, but cannot materially damage them. Or, failing this, you may adopt the plan of allowing him to run with the hen for an hour or so each morning, which will quite suffice to ensure the full fertility of the eggs. Do not return him until the young are out of the nest, unless the return is rendered necessary by the forward condition of the hen.

FEEDING YORKSHIRE SONGSTERS (Iron).—The mixture you are now using will do very well for occasional use as a change, but for regular use a plainer mixture is advisable. Give a staple of three parts canary to one part summer rape, mixed together. In addition to this give a small teaspoonful of the mixture to each bird twice a week, and on one or two other days give a morsel of bread and milk, about the size of a hazel nut, sprinkled with soft sugar, or as a variant of this you may sometimes substitute half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, or a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts yolk of hard-boiled egg and bread crumb or crushed plain biscuit. Give a little green salad, any kind that is in season, daily throughout the summer months, and two or three times a week in winter. During the winter months you must be careful to avoid giving anything that is frosted or decaying, and when suitable greenstuff is not available you may substitute a morsel of some kind of sweet fruit—apple, banana, orange, pear, or raw or boiled carrot. Offer a bath daily in summer, and twice a week in winter.

REFUSED TO SIT (R. M. Round).—Sorry, but you can do nothing at all to make a hen sit if she has no desire to do so of her own accord. The probability is that a second clutch of eggs was developing, in which case she will very soon be laying again. The only way out of your last difficulty was to give the eggs to another hen that had just completed her clutch, or distribute them among two or three hens with small clutches which were just beginning to sit, to get them hatched and the young reared. You might still try this, if you have kept the eggs properly in a small box of bran, or similar material, and given them a half turn every morning and evening, provided they are not more than a fortnight old when this reply appears.

DEAD IN SHELL (P. A. F.).—It is not possible to say definitely what was the cause of the young being dead in the shells, although the hen appeared to sit so closely that she was not seen to leave the nest for more than a few seconds. It may have been due to weakness in the embryos, or, if the young were fully developed, to abnormally thick or strong shells or membranes. In the latter case it would have been helpful had you immersed the eggs in a cup of warm water for a few moments morning and evening on the thirteenth and fourteenth days. You should get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager would send you, post free, for 7d., wherein you will find full details as to the time and amount of interference permissible with young that need assistance in hatching.

SWEATING AND GOING LIGHT (F. W.).—(1) It seems clear that the failure of this hen to perform her maternal duties is due to sheer nervousness, and as she is young, and this is her first attempt, it is quite likely that she may improve in this respect by the time her next brood is hatched. Try removing the cock next time she begins to sit, taking him away on the evening of the third day when you return the eggs for her to commence sitting, and leave her to hatch out and rear the young by herself. When the young are hatched, give a small quantity of equal parts egg yolk and stale bread crumb, and sprinkle it lightly with maw seed. After the first day gradually bring the composition of the soft food to equal parts egg, bread crumb, and crushed sponge cake. Give a little spray of freshly-gathered green food morning and afternoon from the second day, and gradually increase the quantity as the young get older and also give it three times a day if convenient. If the hen shows signs of not feeding the young under these circumstances, offer a teaspoonful of soaked summer rape every day, and also offer a bath in which you have dissolved a little common salt, sufficient to make the water taste faintly saline. (2) Cage this hen alone and do not attempt to breed with her this season unless she makes a good and complete recovery. A flight cage in which she can get a fair amount of exercise would be best for her. Treat as follows. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Give separately every second day a piece of bread the size of a small walnut, soaked in cold milk, drained, three drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of scalded rape twice a week, and on the remaining days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, niger, teazle and broken groats. Give three or four crisp young dandelion leaves daily. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and after this give instead 20 drops of Chemical Food two days in every three for two or three weeks.

A CRIPPLED HEN (Amadis).—(1) It is only what might be expected for the hen to sit more than usually on the perch after losing her leg until she gets more accustomed to managing with only one, and that one has acquired some additional strength of muscle to compensate for the loss of its fellow, as it must do. But after a time, if the wound has made a good recovery she will doubtless show more energy and be able to get along better. During the fine summer months there is no reason why you should not give her a chance in the aviary, but it would be best to allow her to acquire a little skill in getting about on the leg before doing so, and then you should keep an eye on her for a time to see if the others worry her. Possibly they will not notice her, but only the test can make this point sure. There is practically no risk of her attempting to nest until she recovers some agility, and if she did so then, there is no reason why you should prevent her. (2) Give the Norwich cock a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it daily for a week, and every second day for another week after, and add to the water 20 drops of Chemical Food every second day for a fortnight. As he seems to have made a complete recovery from the bronchitis, there is no reason why you should not breed with him this season if you wish to do so.

YOUNG DISAPPEARED (F. B., Bristol).—There are certainly cases on record (plenty of them) to make the matter indisputable, of both the cock and hen eating the young after hatching, but this is just as certainly not the rule. It is, in fact, a somewhat rare occurrence, and shows an abnormal or depraved condition of the culprit. I note you say that no trace of the young could be found in the cage, so I take it you searched well after them, not only on the cage floor, but in the nest. Sometimes these apparently mysterious disappearances are very easily explained by the young remains being discovered after all in some unexpected way. But assuming they had really disappeared, there is no evidence which parent was the real culprit, though the cock is the one most to be suspected, and I would advise you to remove him when the hen commences to sit her next brood, and leave her to hatch out and rear them by herself.

NORWICH HENS SOFT (J.M.G.).—(1) A week or two of the following treatment will doubtless put this hen right. Give a staple of plain canary seed. Give separately in addition every second day for a fortnight a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and also half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of scalded summer rape and a morsel of banana. Give two crisp young leaves of dandelion daily, or a spray of watercress. In the drinking water add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice, every second day for a week. In the next week give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid. (2) Treat the 1914 hen for a fortnight the same as No. 1. Cage her alone during the treatment, and every day during the first week catch her, and bathe the feet for a few minutes in a warm solution of boracic acid, a small teaspoonful of the acid in a saucerful of warm water. Then dry, and gently anoint them with a little zinc ointment. Do not leave any surplus grease about them to collect dirt from the cage floor.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

HAND-REARING THRUSHES (H.).—In hand-rearing young Thrushes the same methods may be used as advised to (W.R.M.) in this issue. In your case you had better remove the full brood, hand-rear them all, and then give the hens their liberty. Young males commence to warble soon after they can feed themselves, so you will not have long to wait to decide which to keep. For exhibition purposes a good hen is frequently a better bird than a cock; in fact, the big winners are mostly hens.

BREEDING LINNET-CANARY MULES (A Novice).—As you are quite a novice, I think you would do well to get our book on Hybrid breeding, 1/2 post free. Put your two birds into the breeding cage, and after a few days give them a nest pan, some moss, and cowhair, all of which you can purchase from most corn dealers or bird shops. Feed the birds on mixed seed; 4 parts canary, 2 parts summer rape, 2 parts teazle, and a spoonful of hemp, twice a week, or buy a packet of wild seed mixture and give them a spoonful every other day until the hen lays, afterwards feed on the canary, rape and teazle mixture until the young ones are hatched. When the young ones arrive, which they do after the hen has incubated the eggs for a fortnight, you must give the old ones hard-boiled egg and biscuit, or sponge cake, to feed the young ones with. The hard-boiled egg should be beaten up with a fork, or chopped very finely; add the biscuit or sponge cake and slightly moisten it if it appears too dry. See that this is made fresh twice a day, and is given to the birds quite sweet. Throw away any stale food. When the young are three days old, give a little maw and hemp seed and a spray of green food. As they grow, give seeding tops of chickweed and grass. When they leave the nest and can feed themselves, do not discontinue the soft food too quickly; give a little occasionally so as to keep them growing.

BLACK BULLFINCH (Alf Rutter).—You omitted to send your address, which is contrary to our rules. Will you please send it on a postcard? The cause of your bird moulting out black in plumage is a superabundance of black pigment in the blood. As yours is quite an old bird, it is probable that his long life of artificial feeding has affected him. It would be interesting to know upon what seeds you feed him. These cases of Melanism we occasionally hear of, the Bullfinch and Skylark being the species mostly affected among cage birds. He may at his next moult regain part of his natural plumage, but I should be very surprised if he became quite normal.

REARING BLACKBIRDS (W.R.M.).—Remove the young for hand-rearing just as the quills begin to shoot, when the birds begin to open their eyes. If left later they become too shy to be fed. Take a couple of the top birds, the darkest in colour, as these are more likely to be males. If you do not remove the nest, put them in a box or basket, and make a rough nest of hay for them, which should be replenished every three or four days. Blackbirds are not difficult to hand-rear, and have been brought up on a variety of mixtures, but to get good strong lusty birds, it must be done properly. The following method I have found to answer admirably: Boil a fresh egg ten minutes; when cold, well mix with a fork with two crushed Osborne biscuits, and add to it a tablespoonful of best ants' eggs, stirring all well together. Just before feeding, take a small quantity and make it rather sloppy with new milk. Be careful that the food is always fresh and sweet, or you will probably lose the young ones. Feed a little at a time, about every hour, for the first few days, then every two hours. Commence as early as possible in the morning. Add just a pinch of grit to the food every few days. In addition to the above food, give flies, small insects, and live ants' eggs. Be careful to keep the birds cosy and warm, especially at night, when they should be covered over with a piece of flannel. After a good meal the birds should be offered a few drops of water on the feeding stick, but they do not require this at every meal, only, say, about four times a day.

BREEDING CANARIES AND MULES (J. K. Novice).—To attempt to breed from hen Canaries flying loose in an aviary with cock Canaries and British birds as partners does not always work out quite satisfactorily. The reason is that "Birds of a feather flock together," and Canaries are therefore more likely to mate with Canaries than with birds of another species, but this is not a hard and fast rule; it depends greatly upon the condition of the male birds. If the cock Canaries are not in high condition and they do not respond readily to the hen's calls, a precocious British bird will do so. In this way I have known a brood of Mules to be bred where Canaries are flying, also Canaries and Mules to be hatched in the same nest. If you want to breed both, keep the cock Canary population of the aviary very low, and see that the Britishers are in high condition.

SNOW BUNTING FOR EXHIBITION (W. Bearly).—For exhibition purposes a Snow Bunting should be large and well proportioned. Many of them have large bodies and small heads, consequently they appear badly proportioned. The colours should be as distinct and pure as possible, and, of course, the bird should be shown in good condition and perfectly steady. The latter point is of great importance with all the Buntings, as they are naturally of a wild disposition. His staple food should be canary seed, and he is not particular if he is never supplied with any other; but it is better to vary it if possible with a little maw, cracked hemp, shelled oats, rape, etc. As a rule they do not improve when moulted in confinement, their colours losing much of their pureness of tone.

BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS

should consult Houlton's great work, "Coge-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2, "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4, "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Birdrooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Moult British Birds." HEN NOT FEEDING MULES (J.M.D.).—Non-feeding hens are quite a common complaint among fanciers. The trouble arises from various causes. The hen may come from a bad feeding strain, and such birds are seldom reliable; but more frequently hens refuse to feed on account of ill-health. In many cases the bird is apparently quite well, but if compared with others is scarcely so robust. Another cause of failure is want of condition, and this appears to be your trouble, if not solely, anyway partly so. By your own account she has never laid a full clutch of four or five eggs. You say she laid 3 eggs the first time, and now only one egg. This does not appear to me to be a sign of high condition. I would advise you to remove the Goldfinch, but hang him near the hen, and proceed to feed her up by giving a spoonful of good egg food every other day, a little mixed seeds on other days, and a liberal supply of dandelion heads, chickweed, and seeding grass. You will find the dandelion heads particularly useful. Let her bathe daily, and keep her like this for a week or two until she begins to get anxious to go to nest again, then introduce the Goldfinch. When the young arrive, entice her to feed by giving frequent changes of food and supplying it little and often. Many hens will frequently feed on wild food and ordinary green stuff, although neglecting to do so with egg food, probably because the liberal allowance of vegetable matter assists to keep them in prime health and condition, and consequently they are in a fit state to attend to their maternal duties.

MULES FOR SINGING (Nor'-West).—Nearly all young birds imitate any sound they hear, and young Mules are no exception, so if you want them to learn the wild note of any particular Finch they must be put where they can hear the old bird singing directly they leave the nest and are able to feed themselves. You must be careful that they only hear this bird—and none other. If you mix up young Canaries and Mules you will find the Mules will take some of the Canary notes. The only way is to keep them quite distinct, and even then you are not certain that they will sing the Finch note and none other. Every bird has a few natural notes of its own, which it is almost certain to include.

DEATH OF GREENFINCH (A. Lodge).—I am sorry to hear you have lost your bird; had you written earlier I might have assisted you. You appear to have fed him correctly as far as seed is concerned, so I am inclined to think there was something wrong in your other management. Did he take cold? or was he hung in a draughty place? Although the Greenie is naturally a very hardy bird, yet if he is kept in a kitchen, which at times must be rather warm, he is particularly susceptible to draughts and easily takes cold. If in future you find any of your birds mopy and you are unable to decide upon their ailment, your best plan is to put them on a bread and milk diet with a pinch of maw seed. A few drops of whisky in the drinking water will frequently effect a sure.

BREEDING MEALWORMS (H. Hipkins).—Get a good sized tin, such as a biscuit tin. Bore with a bradawl two rows of holes right round the sides at the top, within about an inch of the lid. Cut 3 pieces of sacking, fold them so that they are not quite so large as the top of the tin, and will drop in easily. Dry them thoroughly. Put a layer of bran about an inch or so thick on the bottom of the tin, and on that a piece of the sacking; then another layer and another piece of sacking, and so on until the tin is about 3 parts full. Turn into this about a pint of mealworms, or less if you do not care to buy so many. Put in a handful of fresh meal occasionally. Place the tin in a warm cupboard by the fire and disturb it as little as possible. It takes about 12 months for the worms to turn to beetles, lay eggs, and reproduce worms again. The best time to change the contents, sifting out the dust and putting in fresh sacking and bran or meal, is during the winter, when the eggs have hatched and there are only worms in the box.

LARK FOOD (Bird Shop).—Fine ground chicken meal with a little meat meal added, and hot water poured over it, so as to make it crumbly moist, should answer your purpose. Lightly cracked hemp should also be supplied. They will do well on this for some time. Better quality food, which would take rather longer to make, should be given to those you have on hand for any length of time, or that you want to bring into song. The following does admirably: 1lb. wheat meal (not flour), 4 tablespoonsful of coarse sugar, 3 or 4 ozs. beef suet, 1 hard-boiled egg; mix and place in cool oven until sugar and fat are melted. Stir until brown. Place in jar for use.

WILL MULES BREED (Novice).—There are certain fanciers who claim to have bred with Mules; but then these have been paired to one of their parents, not paired Mule to Mule. I certainly think it quite possible for Mules to have bred with one of their parents, but, as a rule, one may say that these crosses will not breed. You see, if they did, we should in time get such a curious mixture of birds that distinct species would no longer exist. (2) The only greenish-yellow bird that you would be likely to see at this time of the year is the Greenfinch; but this bird, I presume, is well known to you. I fear your description is hardly full enough for me to assist you. (3) Siskins have been bred in captivity. An aviary would be the most likely place for them, but there is no reason why you should not try in a cage. The birds should be put together at once. They will not commence to nest until the proper time, and then you will have to give them every encouragement in the way of nesting materials and good food to help them along.

WHICH ONE TO KEEP (Grateful).—It is a difficult matter to advise you as to which to keep of your nest of young Thrushes. If I had them I would keep them until the males began to warble. When overcrowded I should select the sleekest and brightest looking, and those with the boldest eyes, but with only a brood it is far better to keep them all for a time; they are not long before they show their sex, especially when they are well cared for.

A LINNET FANCIER (Linnet).—If your young Linnet is only seven months old, he must have been a particularly late hatched one, and if so, this would account for his singing so badly. No bird is at his best the first season, you cannot do better than moult him out and keep him under a good tutor. It is much better to wait for a natural moult. Feed him up well during the summer on plenty of wild food, so that he is perfectly healthy when the moulting time arrives. (2) Get one ounce of citrate of iron and ammonia from the chemist, dissolve as much in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as will lie on a threepenny-piece. It can be given a little stronger if thought necessary, but is inclined to bind if given too strong. A little port wine can be added to it if the birds are very backward. (3, 4) You can store plantain and many other wild seeds for winter use, but you must be careful to get them ripe, and thoroughly dry them before finally storing away. Shepherds' purse has a tiny white flower at the tip of the plant, and at the end of the branches which spring from the main stem is a "purse" of seeds. You would do well to get our book, "Seeds and Wild Plants for Cage Birds," 1s. 2d. post free. It describes all the suitable seeds and plants, and has illustrations of most of them, so that one can easily identify. (5) I must confess I have never studied the song of the Linnet for singing contests, which I suppose you require. To me a good strong singer, with full rich notes, not too jerky, and well sustained, is the perfect vocalist.

HAND-REARING STARLINGS (Experimentor).—The birds would have been better if left until a little older, but as they are such easy subjects to hand-rear, there is no reason why you should not succeed. Crush a couple of Osborne biscuits and mix with them half a hard-boiled egg; make the whole moist with new milk. Feed them on this for the first week, then add a little insectile food to it, increasing the quantity. Feed for the first week every hour, and afterwards every two hours. The first meal should be at daylight, and the last at sundown. Add a pinch of grit to the food occasionally, and see that it is always perfectly sweet. Give also greenfly, small caterpillars, or pieces of mealworms. Young Starlings are rather dirty birds to handrear, and they must be kept scrupulously clean or they will not thrive. A handful of hay in a box or basket makes a capital nest, and can be easily changed. See that you keep them warm and cosy at night. Do not overfeed.

PARTNER FOR YORKSHIRE HEN (Very Anxious).—A stout-bodied Goldfinch or Linnet would suit for Mule production, but most fanciers prefer the Norwich hen for this purpose, although I have seen some very smart specimens produced from the Yorkshire.

MATING LINNET AND CANARY (P. Sharpe).—I gather from your letters that you have not yet tried your birds together. I would therefore advise you to do so at once; it appears that they are both ready for nesting. You must not judge too hastily of the behaviour of the Linnet when alone; he may be quite different when mated up. Put them together at once, and give a nestpan and building materials.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

SICK COCKATIEL (Hulbert).—I am afraid there is not a great deal of hope for the bird. In lieu of the drinking water supply the following: one teaspoonful condensed milk, one-third teaspoonful cod-liver oil emulsion, and two tablespoonfuls or a little more of boiling water, so that when stirred together and cool it will have about the consistency of new milk. Also give daily a piece of sponge cake upon which ten drops of cod liver oil emulsion have been put, and then moistened with a little milk and water prepared much as above. It could have a few sips of weak brandy and water once or twice during the day. In addition to the above, supply the regular menu, but only give the Dinneford's Magnesia sufficiently often to keep the bowels moving quite freely, yet without any abnormal looseness. Report progress after a week, supplying full details, as to what extent the bird has partaken of the milk mixture and sop, also giving as full a description as you can of its condition, noting, if possible, whether the wasting away appears to be checked. It almost appears, however, from your details that the bird is already in extremis.

LIVE FOOD FOR SHAMA (Shama).—The tastes of individual birds vary considerably, and it does not by any means follow that one will accept what another will take. My Shamas have always readily accepted spiders, smooth caterpillars, wireworms, earwigs, flies, and various garden beetles, but I have never found them any too partial either to earthworms (small and medium sized ones have been taken), or woodlice; these have been taken, though not in any quantity. Such butterflies and moths as found their way into their enclosure seldom escaped. The larvae (grubs) of any of the above are even more readily accepted than the imago (perfect insect), and this also applies to the pupa (chrysalis) of the various insects named. Earwigs can be most easily trapped, and are eaten with gusto.

WHAT BIRD, VALUE, ETC.? (I.R.F.).—The details you supply are not sufficient for identification, I fear, unless it is a female Alexandrine. All you tell me is that it is dark green on head and back, with crimson patches on top of wings, that it is pale green below, and its tail is 14ins. long. Am I to understand that the bird is all green (dark and light) save for the crimson patches on top of wings. I opine there are other colours, both in wings and tail, and very probably facial and neck markings. If you will supply me with the details on these points I will give you a definite answer next week, and am keeping your query by me for the purpose.

PARROT WHEEZY (Hibernia).—Your "Parrot" is a Roseate Cockatoo. Keep it out of draught, and put in its drinking water every fourth day one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia. Also get the following mixture: ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine, in equal parts; put half a teaspoonful of the mixture to each two tablespoonfuls of the drinking water, and continue the treatment for two or three weeks, repeating it whenever any huskiness appears. Your description is very incomplete, but I take your bird to be as above; if you doubt my identification, send me a full description of the plumage, and I will correct or confirm. If it is a Roseate and a talking specimen, its value is about 60s.

AVIARY DETAILS (T.J.G.).—Before being able to give you an intelligible reply, I must have more information, as the space for each reply in this column is strictly limited. I must know: space available, aspect of site, class of birds it is desired to keep. I can, of course, express an opinion upon any sketch you choose to submit, and suggest alterations if needful. I can also give general principles in this column, but not publish plans, owing to space, cost of blocks, etc. However, to do even this, I must have as full details as possible.

BENGALESE NOT HATCHING (F. Giles). It is not advisable to treat either British or foreign birds as you do Canaries; unless you have foster parents you can give the eggs to, it is better to leave them alone. Bengalese are not a species, but a hybrid produced in the far past by the Japanese, and as one would expect, they are erratic sitters, and of the total of eggs laid, a very small percentage are hatched out or reared. Keep the bath on the cage-front, so that the sitting bird can bathe when she comes off the nest. This will supply all the moisture necessary. If any young are hatched out, as there ultimately should be, supply a little soft food daily, also greenfood liberally (lettuce, chickweed, seeding and flowering grass, etc.), and keep a millet spray in the cage. Apart from this you must exercise patience, for the Bengalese are erratic, but in the end you should have some luck.

JAVA SPARROWS WHEN NESTING (Mrs. Goddard).—Give a little of some good insectile mixture (soft food) daily. Supply canary seed, white millet, and millet sprays; also greenfood liberally, such as seeding and flowering grass, tender lettuce, chickweed, groundsel, etc. There is no occasion to separate the sexes with these birds, and I opine such as are hatched out will be reared. Of course, you cannot alter things now—that is, for the present clutch of eggs, but Java Sparrows usually like a box closed all round with merely an hole cut out for entrance, and mostly build a domed nest therein, with hay, grass, and greenfood stems. If you have an open canary sort of nest, replace it with a such a one as above as soon as the present clutch is out of hand, or a large size rush nest would meet the case. The incubation period varies from 12 to 14 days. "Foreign Birds for Begiuners," 1s. 1½d., post free, from our Manager, would help you.

WHYDAHS (E. N. Maltby).—The Queen Whydah has never been common, and of late years has certainly been very scarce in the market. It is, of course, consequently rather expensive (60/- or more). Australian birds also have been coming over very irregularly recently and are consequently expensive, and, added to this, Gouldian Finches (40/- to 60/- pair) are not easy to establish either. The Whydahs advertised cheaply as "Whydahs" are either Pin-tail or Paradise; both species are handsome and striking, but when advertised at the price you name they are out of colour; that is, in eclipse plumage, when males and females closely resemble each other, and you have to take your chance of getting a true pair. In the breeding season, when the males are in colour and wear their long caudal plumes, the value is from 7/6 pair upwards. "Bird Notes" is the Journal of the Foreign Bird Club, free to members. You can get it through "Cage Birds," 1/7 post free monthly, or particulars of membership from S. Williams, Holland Lodge, Edmonton, N.

WHAT PARROT? (Polly, Watford).—It is a Blue-fronted Amazon, and requires seed mixture, ripe fruit, and nuts, and it can also have dry crusts, biscuits, sponge, and other plain cake. Grit, cuttlebone, and a piece of wood should be continually in the cage. As regards seed mixture, the following is a good one: one part each maize, shelled monkey nuts, wheat, dari, and paddy rice, and two parts each hemp, sunflower, and oats, the whole to be well mixed. It is also well to keep a small tin of canary and white millet seed (in equal parts) in the cage. The moult is irregular; some Parrots are moulting now, others do so later. A talking, tame, Blue-front in good feather is worth from 60s. to 80s., your bird probably a little more if it would perform and show its talking ability to a would-be purchaser.

PINK AND GREY PARROT STUCK IN THE MOULT (E. Glover).—It is a Rose-breasted Cockatoo, usually a hardy species. Give it the following seed mixture: one part each (by measure) wheat, dari, shelled nuts, and maize, and two parts each oats, hemp, and sunflower seeds—well mix, and keep supply in the cage. Also continue to supply the canary seed separately. It ought to have fruit or greenfood, also crusts, pieces of biscuit, and plain cake. Put it out of doors in some unexposed position on warm days. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intervening days half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates. If you can induce it to eat a little sponge cake, a piece of biscuit, or bread, give it a piece once or twice daily, after spreading thereon and allowing to soak in five drops of cod-liver oil emulsion. If you cannot give the latter any other way you must give five drops of the C.L.O. emulsion direct to the beak, from a quill or something similar, but it is better given on either bread or cake. As regards fruit, try it with sweet apple, banana, or orange. You will have to get it to take a little more varied dietary or you will lose the bird. Grit, cuttlebone, and a piece of wood to chew up must be continually in the cage. Report progress in two or three weeks with full details.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Mr. G. Busby.—Cock Canary succumbed to enteritis, the result of ptomaine poisoning due to some impurity taken with the food. There is no douht this indirectly caused the death of the young birds also.

The Twite in Wales.

The Twite, or Mountain Linnet, as it is sometimes called, is reported to be plentiful this year in North Wales. It is not usually recognised as breeding freely in the principality, but "W.C." in the "Manchester Dispatch" says he has this season found nests in the gorse, heather, fern beds, and brambles on the mountain sides and valleys of North Wales, and another correspondent says the bird is numerous between Norbreck and the Wyre.

The 2nd annual report and balance-sheet of the Foreign Bird Exhibitors' League are to hand from the hon. sec., Mr. A. Silver, 303, Streatham High Road, S.W. Notwithstanding the payment of £22 odd in special prizes and share of loss on the autumn show there is only a small reduction amounting to £1 6s. 1d. in cash balance in hand, £35 4s. 4d. being brought forward from 1914, and £33 18s. 3d. remaining at bank. Besides this, there is an asset of £11 in subscriptions not yet paid, so that the League seems to be starting a new season upon a very sound basis. The report contains a list of winners of diplomas for new species, and of the special prizes at the club show.

He Took the Biscuit.

The story of the artist who painted a basket of fruit so realistically that the birds pecked at it recently found parallel in the Spratt's biscuit which is represented at the bottom of the water-troughs issued to shopkeepers and others by the well known firm. A big dog having slaked his thirst essayed to get the "biscuit" out. The attempt failed, and the dog went off, only to return a second and third time for further tries at the elusive delicacy. Ultimately a real biscuit from the owner of the trough sent him away rejoicing.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOS. TODD (Glasgow).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. J. Young, sec. City of Glasgow O.A., that I have to inform you of the death of Mr. Thomas Todd, on May 22. He was laid to rest in the Western Necropolis, on Wednesday, May 26, the remains being followed to the grave by a very large number of relatives and friends, the City of Glasgow O.A. being represented by Messrs. T. Thomson (President), Mr. McClure, and A. Renfrew. Mr. Todd was a life long fancier, his special favourite being the Scotch Fancy Canary, which he bred and exhibited with pronounced success for many years. He was associated with City of Glasgow O.A. for many years, and had filled all offices from president down. Of a seemingly rough exterior he was of a kindly and warm nature, and those who knew him best will miss him most. I am sure I am voicing the sentiments of all members of City of Glasgow O.A. and the entire Fancy when I say the deepest sympathy goes out to Mrs. Todd and family in their great bereavement.

MR. J. L. WARD, M.A. (Glasgow).

Fancier friends of Mr. James Ward, Main Street, Shettleston, for many years a successful Scotch Fancy breeder, will regret to learn that his son, Mr. James L. Ward, M.A., perished in the Lusitania disaster, as recorded in the report published in CAGE BIRDS of May 22 of the meeting of the Shettleston and Carntyne C.B.S., writes Mr. W. A. Howieson. A gradnate of Glasgow University, Mr. Ward was by profession a teacher. On leaving the University five years ago, he accepted a position in Barrhead H.G. School, which he afterwards relinquished to go to Canada, there to continue his scholastic duties. While there he held the important positions of English and mathematical master in Edmonton Technical School, Alberta, and Principal of Wilkie High School, Saskatchewan. Being associated with the Fancy from boyhood, Mr. Ward was a good judge of a bird, and though still young, had officiated several times successfully as a judge at some of the smaller shows. He was highly popular among all his scholastic and other friends. All fanciers will extend their deepest sympathy to his relatives and friends who mourn for one cut off in the full vigour of young manhood and on the threshold of a promising career.

Mr. John S. Clarke's Son Wounded.

It may interest your readers who have been members of the outings to Epping Forest, writes Mr. J. S. Clarke, to know that my son, D. H. Clarke (Harold), who went to Australia, and volunteered at the outbreak of the war, has been wounded in the left forearm, four or five places, by shrapnel, whilst fighting for the old country in the Dardanelles. He is in hospital, and expects a few weeks leisure.

[We are sure that the many of our readers whose full enjoyment of bird-watching rambles in Epping Forest has been so often dependent upon the keen knowledge and helpful services of Mr. Clarke and his son Harold, will join us in our hope for the speedy recovery of the latter from his injuries.—EDITOR CAGE BIRDS.]

How I Commenced Canary Breeding.

An Amusing Experience related by the winner of our "Disorderly Bird-Room" Competition.

IT may interest many to know how I first came to take up Canary breeding. Firstly, I should ask readers kindly to believe my little tale, it is only too true, and may or may not be quite a novel experience.

I must date back to June, 1913, so as to get at the root of my story, for during that month I purchased a Canary from a dealer, and gave the price of 5s. for it. I, of course, wanted a songster, and was given to understand that he was only a few months old, and in a month's time I should have him in full song. I placed him in a cage, and fed him in an ignorant manner, penny packet seed being ever before him, with an over-abundance of groundsel of more than one quality.

I will not weary the reader by going into all details, but now I come to the time when some sweet song was due. None did I obtain. Cheep! Cheep!! was all I could get out of him, then I tried with the plate and wet cork method; but perhaps a little difference in the bird's voice induced me to keep up this monotonous practice. Then I came to the conclusion that "he" was a hen; but still one in the family persisted it was a cock bird, and if I waited till the spring—it was well advanced autumn by this time—I should hear the song that I had waited so long for. What was more annoying, the bird did not grow in the least little bit.

I have not yet come to the most idiotic part of my story, for idiotic it is. Before I relate this particular part let me again impress on the reader that this is perfectly true—each word. Early spring arrived, 1914, and this "splendid" bird, as we termed him here, still refused to sing; time rolled on and still it was doing nothing for its living. Then June came, and at the bottom of the brass cage one morning I found—an egg! You may guess the excitement, one of us saying, "I told you so. Didn't I say 'he' was a hen?" and so on, till it became the talk of the breakfast table.

This sent me hastening to the dealer, whom I stormed at for misrepresenting the bird, and after a certain amount of argument I was induced to buy a mate for her, and a double-compartment breeding cage, so I thought of doing wonders. I was told to put the birds in the separate compartments, and more rigmarole of advice about them was given. When I saw them talking to one another through the wires, I was to let them fly together. I did as instructed, and at last they were together; some material was placed in the cage for nest building (there was already a nest-box provided with the cage), and it was not very long before the "cock" bird started to build a nest.

Still in ignorance, I let "him" get on with it, each day looking for results, arguing that "he" was building a home for his "wife." The nest at last was completed, and to my great surprise the next morn I discovered an egg; this baffled me, as I had never seen the hen go near the nest at any time, and the reader may well imagine how I keenly watched the birds. Next morn yet another egg, and I discovered that the "cock" bird had been laying the eggs! I felt so disgusted that I was determined I would not work my "promising hobby" in the dark, so I resolved to find some journal or book on the matter. Let me mention one incident. When I discovered I was entirely on the wrong track, I took the eggs and nest completely away from the birds, with the result that the poor things kept up a continuous and wearysome "cheep, cheep, cheep," and my sister, who is very naturally kind to dumb animals, told me I was cruel to take the nest away, mentioning something to the effect that I should not like it if I had my home taken away from me. So she coolly put the nest back again.

On looking round the bookstalls I soon discovered the weekly journal CAGE BIRDS, and I purchased a copy. After it had been in my possession for about an hour I had learnt a lot, and shortly afterwards discovered I had been playing with two Roller Canary hens, then generally advertised as "Hartz Mountain Rollers." Now I must mention that my brother came to the rescue, and among the pages of CAGE BIRDS we hit upon a good advert. sent for a matched pair of Yorkshires, and while they were being dispatched ordered, by post, "Canary Breeding for Beginners." At the end of the first week—it was the latter part of June—we had the pair well matched, and by thoroughly reading the book I have mentioned we were very soon on the right road to success. By the end of the season we had reared five bonny birds, three of which were clear yellow cocks. I have them now in breeding condition. I often laugh over my early experiences, and I now advise anyone who is about to take up this most fascinating hobby to get birds from genuine fanciers to save disappointment, and rely on the thoroughly good information of CAGE BIRDS and its associates.

As a finish to my story I must say that it is through the medium of this magnificent journal that I owe my success in the "Disorderly Bird-Room" Competition. So far this year I have had great success, and in a short time from now I hope to have quite a number of chicks. I have not yet put any birds into shows, but I shall not be satisfied until I get there.—S. C. Tucker (Dover).

"When the Cat's Away."

The Carrion Crow is fairly numerous here (on the Welsh hills), says "W.C." in the "Manchester Dispatch," and there are complaints of the destruction done to the Grouse by Carrion, the nests, eggs, and young birds being all destroyed. The absence of the usual custodians of the hills seems to be known to Crows, and this may be the cause of the increase in his activity.

A Famous Cycle Mail-Order House.

The chief advantage arising out of the Mail-order House is the facilities offered to the public for purchasing goods of almost every description at rock-bottom prices, and on terms to suit purchaser's convenience. This method of dealing direct with the public—whilst strictly being of American origin—has undoubtedly secured for the house of O'Brien, the pioneer of selling cycles by post, enormous popularity, not only on account of his low prices, but also for the extraordinary good value he gives. Dealing direct with the public as he does, there is no call for highly-paid representatives or for the employment of the first or second middleman, each of whom would in the ordinary way have to be paid for by the purchaser. Thus there is but one profit; and Mr. O'Brien has fixed this at the very minimum to the individual, because, as he says, "With the large number of machines I supply every year, I can afford to sell at nearly cost price." The system of easy payment introduced by him many years ago has met with immense favour. It is within the scope of everyone to possess a high-grade bicycle. Mr. O'Brien will send you full descriptive catalogues and terms if you write to his offices in Coventry.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

ARE YOU AN ANGLER?

As announced last week, CAGE BIRDS will have another sister journal on June 17, when the first number of FISHING will be published from 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. This new penny weekly will deal in a bright and interesting way with all branches of Angling—Coarse, Salmon, Trout, and Sea Fishing—and will be on sale at newsagents and bookstalls Thursday morning each week.

The subscription to FISHING will be the same as for CAGE BIRDS, viz.: 6s. per annum, 3s. 3d. half-year, 1s. 8d. three months, post free, and subscriptions can now be received. We shall be glad to receive, for filing purposes, the names and addresses of any CAGE BIRDS readers who go a-fishing, and if any kind readers will send the names and addresses of secretaries of local angling clubs, also the names and addresses of piscatorial friends, fishing tackle sellers, etc., the same will be greatly appreciated.

Address all communications: Editor FISHING, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

We have to thank those readers who have so kindly furnished the information asked for last week.

WILD FOODS FOR SEED-EATING BIRDS.

By CHAS. PRIOR (Ropley).

The useful greenfoods, etc., available during June are herein described. Previous articles appeared in our issues of April 10 and May 1, and we have, we are pleased to say, been able to arrange with the Author to contribute a continuation in the first issue of each month.

MERRY, laughing May, blowing kisses after the retreating winter, skips blithely along her verdant path, and bounds joyously into the embrace of June. Glorious, leafy June; the last month of the springtime. Summer migrants are congregating in the woodlands; the evening air is vibrant with their tuneful song. The Cuckoo's notes alone are losing tone.

All the Finches that have liberty are now become almost wholly insectivorous. This does not mean that they have taken to devouring the horny cockchafer, nor to sapping for the slimy slug. Their taste is nicer, more delicate, and more discriminating, and it falls upon those minute examples of insect life that are parasitical to vegetation, and which, by summer-time, are propagating in hordes. Some of the wild foods of June provide the means of conveying this class of live food to domesticated Finches also, and it will then be found that the most exclusively seed-eating species—theoretically—(Greenfinches, Linnets, and Canaries, for examples) have an appetite for insect life of an acceptable kind which convincingly refutes theories of exclusive seed diet.

The Best Weed and Its Best Time.

Shepherd's purse is such a food. May has seen this plant sending up its first seed-arms; June finds it growing taller, and branching freely. If conditions are favourable, it will reach a height of two feet or more; otherwise it may be but from nine to eighteen inches. In either case the time arrives when growth is suspended, and the lower seed pouches turn yellow and ripen. That is the time when the bird-keeper should lay heavy hands upon it.

He will need as accessories a sharp knife and a calico bag. With his left hand he grasps the entire plant, and severs it, close to the root, with the ready knife in his right. He will then at once, with the minimum of shaking, and without further unnecessary handling, transfer it to the bag. The reason for this procedure is that the value of shepherd's purse lies in its ripe, yellow seed pouches, which, when they are yellow and ripe, break at a touch and spill their contents. Hence the utility of the bag. If they were taken along on their stems in bunches, most of their value would be lost in transit; but inside the bag everything is safe, and the more knocking about it gets, the better.

Upon arrival home, the bag is emptied into a rather coarse seed sieve, and the contents are riddled, with some vigour, over a sheet of paper. The golden seed soon comes tumbling out, and with it the most amazing medley of almost microscopic insect life it is possible to conceive. Even the emptied "shucks" left behind in the sieve are undulatory with the creeping and squirming of the discomfited parasites.

An Aid to Matrimony.

This is an extraordinary food, and the effect it has in the bird room is remarkable. In the breeding section, if the aim be to produce hybrids, the mated pairs must be in very advanced breeding form before the first condition essential to success can be established, as every breeder knows. Even with this vital point assured, there still remain instances of partners who rebel against the breeder's arbitrary mating. The use of shepherd's-purse puts these things right. Couples that have hitherto been truculent suspend hostilities, and the riot act is shelved. The hens take sudden interest in wisps of likely nesting stuff, and start to practise their seductive mating calls. The males respond with drooping wings and bursting throat; ardent compliance now swiftly ousting their previous cold aversion.

In honest truth, this jumble of wild seed and insect life is a veritable super-food; one of the very few to successfully challenge, overthrow, and supersede the now declining chickweed. Linnets, above all other birds, are passionately fond of it, and, with the single exception of Goldfinches, who ignore it, there is no seed-eating bird but will find in it something tasty and beneficial. Canaries, Greenfinches, Twites, Redpolls, and Bullfinches in particular, all crowd hard upon the Linnet in their appreciation of its virtues.

Another example of this dual class of wild food is furnished by the finer grasses, many of which commence to seed in June. Not those stout grasses whose yard long seed stems tell so heavily in the farmers' hay stack, and, of course, not the harsh couch grass nor the tough reed, but the sweet, bottom grazing grasses, which are quite well grown if, seed stalk and plume all told, they attain a height of half a foot. These fine grasses bear flowers —or what are the equivalent of flowers—before seeding, and close examination is needed to distinguish the flowering from the seeding stage.

When the distinction is apparent, that is to say, when the grass is actually seeding and not merely flowering, it is ready for the birds. For, coincident with the seeding period, these fine grasses are invariably infested by innumerable parasites of the same minute character as those that are peculiar to shepherd's-purse, and, in collecting them, the bird-keeper is able to annex the highly useful ripening grass seed reinforced by the invaluable element of animal matter contained in the barely visible living insects.

Gives Universal Delight.

All seed-eating birds, quite appropriately, take very readily to this perfectly natural and wholesome fare. The fastidious Goldfinch this time falls into line with the dainty Linnet and the hearty Greenfinch. The Chaffinch and Bramblefinch, even the Buntings, invite themselves to a modest helping. Canaries vie with them all in eager recognition of a real good thing, and adopt it, if they are rearing young, as a substitute which bears quite favourable comparison with chickweed even when that weed is seeding its hardest.

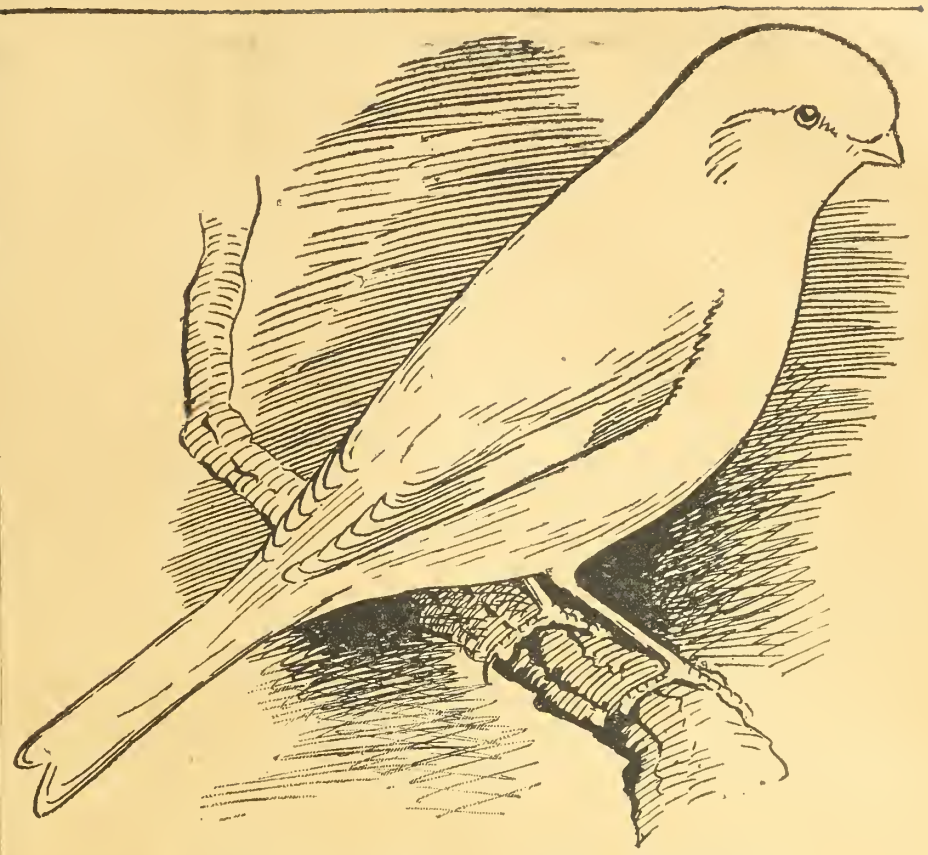
There is no difficulty about conveying these seeding grasses to the Finches. Usually the plants of grass are easily detached from the soil in clumps four or six inches in diameter, which, packed in shallow boxes of convenient size, can be placed on the floor of aviary or flight. This is an excellent method of using these seeding grasses to the best advantage, and it is astonishing how little will be left uneaten by any mixed collection of seed-eaters. If the cages are not roomy enough to allow of this arrangement, it is perhaps best to gather only those stalks of grass that carry seeds, tie them in bunches with cotton, and arrange them as circumstances permit along the cage fronts.

Some Supplies Declining.

Other earlier items of spring dietary are now ending their innings. Broadly speaking, the advent of June marks the exit of chickweed. The yield of dandelion seed-heads also is by this time greatly reduced, soon they, too, will disappear. Whatever supply is yet available may as well be dedicated entirely to the Goldfinches. Groundsel there will still be, though the continuity of its growth is now dependent upon weather conditions; alternate sunshine and showers are favourable to it. So long as it is still to be had in good seeding form it continues as a useful and beneficial auxiliary.

So the principal wild foods of June, named in order of merit, will be shepherd's-purse and the fine seeding grasses—with their attendant parasites, and the seeding heads of groundsel and dandelion; and if the list is not very extensive, it is, all the same, entirely adequate.

The increasing geniality of the season speeds up the development of house-flies, bluebottles, earwigs, caterpillars, ground vermin, etc., which, with the exercise of a little ingenuity, the enterprising bird-keeper will be able to bring into the menu of his Chaffinches, Bramblings, and Buntings.



A BIRD WITH A FINE RECORD.

This typical Buff Norwich Cock won in its first year, 1913, four challenge cups for unflighted birds, also 1st Gillingham, 1st and cup for best bird Deal, 1st and cup best bird Dover, 1st and special Ramsgate, and was instrumental in winning the Kent County Cup for its owner, Mr. F. Pilcher, of Walmer. Last season it won 1st Deal, 3rd Horticultural Hall and 1st Watford Shows.

SOME POPULAR BRITISH BIRDS

By R. BLAKE (Ross-on-Wye).

I WILL first deal with two favourite Softbills, namely, the Song Thrush (Turdus musicus) and the Blackbird (Turdus merula). Those who wish to hand-rear these birds should now be on the look-out for nests. They are very early nesters; in mild winters I have found their nests as early as February. It is usually placed rather low down in the fork of a young tree, or in a thick hedge, and frequently in an old yew tree. The young should be taken when nicely feathered, about 10 days old; if left after that they become shy, and will not "gape" so readily as the younger birds. I find it best to place them in an old nest, in a basket with a lid, then when you open it the youngsters will at once open their mouths for food.

Feeding the Baby Birds.

There are many different kinds of foods used to rear these birds. The one I generally use is crushed puppy biscuits—Spratts' Ovals, for preference. I then put some bread crusts in the oven, bake them until nicely brown, and crush fairly fine with a rolling pin. I mix equal parts of this and the puppy biscuit together, and pour scalding milk over it, taking care not to have it too sloppy or too dry. Also give a few mealworms, cut up, or small earthworms, slugs, or anything in the way of insect life.

Always bear in mind when hand rearing birds of any kind that they must not be crammed with food; little and often is the motto. Do not think that by stuffing their crops full they will last twice as long—it will only do them harm. If you notice any trace of diarrhœa, add a little pea meal and Indian meal to the biscuit, and give rather dry, with a spot of water in the mouth after; this, I find, will usually correct any looseness. I may say I have reared both Thrushes and Blackbirds solely on pea meal and Indian meal, moistened with hot milk, but I do not care for it so much as the food mentioned above.

The Importance of a Tutor.

The youngsters must be kept scrupulously clean and dry, or cramp will result, and death will surely follow. As soon as the young birds are feeding themselves, I place them in a large cage out of doors, where they can hear the wild birds singing. If they do not hear them they will never have a song worth listening to. Of course, if you have a good adult bird, singing pure wild notes, place the youngsters near his cage for a lesson.

As regards cages for adults, I think there is nothing to beat a large packing case about 4ft. long, 2ft. or 3ft. high, and 2ft. deep, and 1in. mesh wire-netting on the front, and a good coat of tar all over. I keep them out in the garden all the year round, and have a piece of canvas well tarred, to drop over the front at night. In this kind of cage they will keep in excellent health, condition, and song.

I give a good big bath daily, and plenty of earth on the bottom of the cage, and turf about half of it. It is a treat to see the birds searching amongst the earth for worms and other insects when it is freshly put in. I have a board about 5in. or 6in. deep along the bottom to lift up for cleaning out purposes. Don't be led away with the idea that birds will not sing so well in large cages—that's all stuff. No bird sings unless it is healthy and happy, and a large cage where it can take plenty of exercise ensures both health and happiness.

A good house cage is of the box pattern, 30in. to 36in. long, 24in. high, and 18in. deep, with two perches only, and a loose sand tray. It should have two doors, one in front for hanging the bath on and for general use, and one in the side for running the bird into a show cage or a spare cage when necessary. The food I give to adult birds is one part dog meal, such as Spratt's, half-part crissel, and half-part of any good maker's Thrush food. Mix it all together, soften with boiling water, mash it up, and add a little boiled potato, grated carrot, or chopped green-food. Give live food of all kinds; do not forget, when taking a country walk, to carry a small tin with you. If you come across an old, partly decayed log, pull some pieces of bark off it, and you will find a plentiful supply of centipedes, woodlice, etc., that will be greatly relished by the birds. Use also earthworms, maggots, mealworms, slugs, snails, and anything alive in the insect line. Do not forget to keep a stone in the Thrush's cage for him to break the snail shells on.

Points for the Show Bench

The Thrush for exhibition should be large and shapely, and stand well up on the legs. The spots must be small and distinct, and carried well down, while the back, wings, and tail should be a rich olive. A good Thrush should have bright and fearless eyes. The wings should be well carried, and not crossed at the tips. I do not think that the Thrush is improved by colour feeding. Give him through the moult a plentiful supply of fruit, berries of various kinds, and insect food, and he will moult out a grand colour.

The Blackbird for show should be as large as possible, and perfectly steady. The plumage throughout should be glossy black, and very tight. He should have a deep, broad chest, and show a nice curve from beak to vent. Wings should be well braced, and carried evenly. The beak and eye cere must be deep orange in colour; this can be improved by adding a little colour food when about half-way through the moult. A little high grade insectivorous food will be found most useful to put on the final polish.

I will next deal with my favourite Finches, the Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Chaffinch, and Greenfinch. To see the Goldfinch at his best we must see him in his wild state. Nothing is more beautiful than a flock of, say, a dozen Goldies settled on a patch of thistles pulling away at the down to get at the seeds. Then off they go all at once, with a merry twitter, and find a fresh feeding ground—this time perhaps, a patch of groundsel. And so they go on.

Wagtails in Ireland.

SIR,—The birds I saw last November, and again with young ones, as stated in my letter in CAGE BIRDS of May 22, were most certainly Yellow Wagtails; I could not possibly mistake them for Grey ones, which are quite common here. I was so glad to see the young ones that I called my sister to see them, and we had a splendid view of them picking amongst the young seeds. They are a much more vivid yellow than the Yellowhammer.

SHAMA.

Eleven Eggs in a Clutch.

SIR,—I have a Norwich hen, unflighted, which has laid 11 eggs in one clutch. She missed one day, between sixth and seventh eggs. I have never heard of this before, and I have wondered if this has happened to anyone else. I have read "C.B." for five years, but I never have read of such a clutch in the correspondence columns during that time.

D. ROWLEY.

When Was the First Open Show?

SIR,—My friend, Mr. Butterworth, is quite correct, and I was quite aware of the facts and conditions, and, sorry to say, its general failure. In my remarks at Ardwick and Manchester C.B.S. I should have been reported to have said "the first show held by a Manchester Society" the latter show was held in the same hall, and was an immense success. I know Levi will quite understand me. Nevertheless, his remarks will have revived old records.

When Judges Disagree.

The Case of "White Rose."

SIR,—Allow me a little space to outradict "Hyson Green" and plainly tell him there is not a word of truth in his statement. I never inferred I had the monopoly of Hyson Green. I don't want to back out of anything I have said, but I like the truth above all things, especially as he, like his friends, stands behind a wall to throw his mud. I did say there are too many men posing as judges who don't know as much about the birds as the exhibitors themselves, and can back my opinion with a score of cases, both in British and Foreign. I know of cases in the Foreign section where the judges have had to ask the names of the birds. I cannot attempt to defend myself here (it would take too much of your valuable space) but let "Hyson Green" come to our next meeting and bring his backers with him, and I will argue the point personally. Let the Fancy draw their conclusions from that.

"Come one, come all, this rock shall fly,
From its firm base as soon as I."

J. W. SAYWELL.

SIR.—Instead of discussing White Rose, Mr. Parlett appears to have got excited about suppers, Kaisers, baskets, Paddy, spoons, mascots, etc., all of which would no doubt be interesting subjects if discussed in the proper place, but in CAGE BIRDS let us discuss birds, and not abuse persons because they have an opinion contrary to our own. Mr. Parlett draws attention to an alleged challenge of Dec. 6, 1913. Fanciers that I heard speak about it did not regard it as a challenge but as a scheme to influence judges to accept "White Rose" as a Canary-Bullfinch. Another letter appeared just about the same date, giving particulars of the breeding of "White Rose," the letter stated that both a cock Greenfinch and a cock Canary were with the hen Bullfinch.

Further discussion on this bird's parentage should no longer be needed after the very life-like picture your artist has given us on the front page of CAGE BIRDS; to observant fanciers with experience and an unbiassed mind, the picture ought to be sufficient evidence. Such a massive head, large bold eye, large stout beak, and massive build of body never was seen on a bird bred from a Canary and a British Bullfinch. The picture also proves the truth of my assertion that it is a badly splashed bird. Splashes are on the saddle, wing coverts, breast and flanks, tail, and, last but not least, the left wing, where the outer flights are dark and the inner flights light, which latter is quite contrary to the markings of Canary Mules, but is of frequent occurrence among British birds. There is one point that your artist has been unable to give us in his grand picture, and that is the very distinct Greenfinch yellow bar on the flight and tail feathers. Those bars are quite conspicuous on the bird itself, and it is utterly impossible to get those yellow bars from a Canary or a Bullfinch, for neither of these birds possess them.

PATRICK.

Concerning the Cuckoo.

SIR,—In "Country Life" of May 29, I notice the following editorial reply to a correspondent who asks "Have cuckoos ever been kept alive in confinement for any considerable time—say a year?" "Yes; you may very frequently see Cuckoos exhibited at shows of cage birds, though the practice of keeping them so is not to be commended. An exhibitor at the Crystal Palace informed the writer that he had been successful in keeping a bird for three years."

Is it really a fact that Cuckoos are "very frequently" exhibited, and can they be kept in captivity for three years? I have never seen one at any show, and I have understood that it is impossible to keep these birds.

BIRD KEEPER.

A Linnet and Canary Club for Burley.

SIR,—It is intended to form a Linnet and Canary singing club, with headquarters at "Pressers Arms," Wordsworth Street, Kirkstall Road, Leeds. As there are a great many fanciers at this side of Leeds, it is to be hoped that there will be a good turn-up of intending members on June 6, at 3, when some definite arrangements can be made re election of officials, etc. Mr. Copley, the proprietor, has promised a substantial prize to be sung for, open to all comers—that is, providing a good membership can be got together. "The Pressers" is well known for its long-established Lark singing club, and in forming the Linnet and Canary Club it is not intended in any way to interfere with the working of the Skylark Club, but to work in harmony together, choosing alternative dates each week for the respective contests. Linnet fanciers, now, hustle a bit; do it now; come along on Saturday afternoon, not forgetting to bring a bird with you. If you do not fancy Linnets, the Lark fanciers will extend the hand of fellowship to you. It is desirable that the intended club should be placed on a good financial basis, and a hearty invitation is extended to all fanciers to come and help to make it a success.

W. SMITH, Hon. Sec.

A Homing Greenfinch.

SIR,—As a constant reader of your interesting paper CAGE BIRDS, I write to tell you of an experience I had this afternoon, May 26. Having three cock Greenfinches caged by themselves (two wild caught and one home-bred), and being in want of room, I decided to liberate them. I opened the door of the inner compartment of the aviary, and after a few minutes the house-bred bird flew out and straight away, and was not seen afterwards. Then one of the wild-caught birds came out, perched in small tree, and started singing, and after a few minutes he flew away over the house tops clean out of sight. To my amazement he soon returned, flew down into the garden, and on to the wire front of the aviary, trying to get in. Six or seven times the bird flew away and returned. Being so astonished I called out my wife and daughter, but the bird was gone again, so we all sat in garden and waited. In a few minutes the bird came back just like a homing Pigeon, over the house tops, and then down into the garden and through the side door of the inner compartment to its cage. The third bird would not come out, except as far as the entrance and back again. I might say that the flight where the birds were shut off is five feet back from entrance door, and cannot be seen from the outside. Considering we are almost in the centre of a large town, with thousands of houses all round, I think this is extraordinary. The bird is now in its cage, and a lovely specimen it is. If any of your readers doubt, and would like to call any Saturday afternoon, I am willing to liberate the bird again, for I am convinced it would return. I might say that the bird has not been paired this year, but bred two Mules the year before last. The time between the bird's coming out and its return to its cage was only about half an hour, and I think this goes to prove that if birds are properly cared for they are happy in confinement.

The Norwich Plainhead and How to Improve it.

SIR.—I am disappointed to see what promised to be an interesting and instructive controversy spoiled by the actions of a few jealous fanciers. The motives of such fanciers must be obvious to all interested in Plainheads, and not persons. Why did they all rush to the Fancy Press criticising another fancier's efforts, and yet are themselves unable to find words appertaining to the subject under discussion? They gladly tell us of the number of years they have been in the Fancy, and of the honours their birds have won; but have they produced these champions from their own brains, or otherwise, for not one word will they say as to how they have been produced? It was with pleasure I noted Mr. Allsopp's real sporting offer to his critics. May there be many who "fancy their chance"; also may we have many more of his interesting and original articles.

OBSERVER.

SIR,—If Mr. Bastock is still inclined to his views that the modern Plainhead cannot be produced without the Crest-bred, he could not, I am sure, do better than read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest the article of Mr. Brown, of Plymouth; although in passing I may say I note with surprise the Crest and Cinnamon breeders in this important matter of size are held up as "paragons of virtue," or at least their respective breeds, as examples of size attained without recourse to alien blood—an exalted position I do not begrudge them, but nevertheless think undeserved. What would have been of great interest would have been the views of Mr. Bastock upon why the Crest-bred was the only desirable cross to ensure the correct head properties in our breed, and I hope he will yet favour us. I thank him for his kind invitation to call when next in Birmingham to see a good sample reeking with Crest-bred blood; but what I should really like to see is a good up-to-date sample, guaranteed pure and unadulterated, and not requiring any outside assistance.

Sad Havoc Among Young Birds.

Many Thrushes Drowned in Their Nests.

SIR,—For many years past I have been a keen observer of birds and their nests, but never have I seen such havoc as during the past week or two. This village in North Somerset was visited on Friday, May 7, by a very violent thunderstorm, accompanied by tremendously heavy rain and hail—such as I never remember at this time of the year. On visiting the nests the next day I found about a dozen containing young, all of which were dead, having been drowned by the heavy rain. The Thrushes suffered most; their nests being lined with mud, the water could not soak through them so quickly. It struck me as curious that the nests of small birds, such as Robins, Chaffinches, Wrens, etc., had escaped destruction. This I could not account for, but perhaps some of your readers have known the same thing happen, and could enlighten me. I thought perhaps, being so much smaller in circumference, they would not admit the same quantity of rain. Most of the nests which contained eggs had been deserted. On Thursday last, the 13th, after a heavy day's rain, I found three more nests of young which had suffered the same fate as those on the 7th. It was piteous to see the parent birds bringing food; when they found what had happened they would keep flying around uttering the most plaintive cries.

ROBERT WILLS.

The Craze for Size in Norwich Plainheads.

SIR,—I have read with great satisfaction Mr. Brown's notes on the Norwich Plainhead in your last issue, and whilst agreeing with him in his main conclusions, I think that he assumes that it is only the Norwich that is open to argument. Is Mr. Brown right in suggesting that the Lancashire, the Crest, and the Cinnamon are any nearer to Standard than the Norwich? Judges differ in their estimate of points in the three latter breeds quite as much as in the Norwich, and in my own opinion the average winner in the Plainhead classes is really nearer to standard than in most breeds. To me it is a healthy sign that there is a desire to better the standard of judging in the Norwich rather than the apathy generally shown in the Lancashire, Cinnamon, and to some extent in the Crest Fancies. It has been my lot to judge several western shows during the last three or four years, and I fully realise the difficulties that face a judge when he has to discriminate between birds which differ in type, and, whilst no one likes size better than myself, I think it quite easy to differentiate between size and length, and it is the latter fault which is so detrimental to the Norwich Plainhead—a bird can be too small for the show bench; he cannot be too big, but he may be too long. Browy heads, again, are a blemish, but so are small narrow heads, and I would rather have the former fault in my stock than the latter, but it should only appear when over the second moult.

To illustrate my point, I might take two buff cocks shown by those well-known old Cornish fanciers, Messrs. Stephens and Gaved in 1914. One was a good sized, big headed bird, a trifle browy, and perhaps a bit long, the other was smaller, more shapely, and had about the best feather I have ever seen on a buff cock, but he was very weak in head. At Exeter show the smaller bird won, with the other, I think, 3rd. At Plymouth, a week later, the larger bird was 4th in a very strong class, and the other unnoticed, while at Bodmin and other Cornish shows the positions were again reversed. Most of the Norwich Fanciers at Plymouth greatly preferred the larger bird, myself amongst them, but on a balance of points, I hardly know which should be the winner, though I think a small head a fatal blemish in good company. In the W.C.O.S. at Plymouth, and I have no doubt in other societies, there are fanciers who have built and are building up strains of Plainheads, big in size and true to type without giving extortionate prices for their stock birds, but, as Mr. Brown says, it takes time. It cannot be done by using small headed cock birds, however good in other points, and my experience from enquiries I get is that most Norwich fanciers have come to this conclusion. Mr. Brown's opinion about outside crosses is, I believe, the opinion of most of the Plymouth fanciers. We all have come to the conclusion that after all the Norwich Plainhead is really bigger, where size and not length is required, than either the Lancashire, the Crest bred or the Cinnamon.

I have always thought that although the standard of a breed must apply to all of the breed, yet we should make some difference between yellows and buffs, and cocks and hens in our estimate of the value of points. I consider size, especially in head, necessary in the cocks, but should not take so much notice of lack of same in hens. This would also apply to colour; shape, quality, and tightness of feather being the points to be looked for in the hen. I should always expect to get a bigger chest in the buff, and should allow something for a slight fullness between the thighs in the buff, as compared with the yellow. The yellow should be clean cut behind, and be allowed a point or so if not so bold in front as the Buff. These remarks of course only apply to the bird that is not perfection, the perfect bird requires no allowances.

THOS. POPE.

Our Front Page of Last Week.

SIR,—Kindly accept my thanks for the glorious picture of your artist, produced last week, of two magnificent birds. Seldom, if ever, has such a picture been produced before. We have one of the best Greenfinch Mules, if not the best, ever put on the show bench, winner of 88 first prizes, and not done yet, alongside the sensation of the cage bird Fancy "White Rose." The Greenfinch Mule shows the yellow flush of the Greenfinch wings and tail to perfection, and the type and shape also of Greenfinch. The Canary-Bullfinch shows the yellow only of the Canary; certainly something more on the black feathers, but no more than the Canary on the light feathers. He has the size, type and quality of that most expert breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Canary, W. Vardy, from whom its father originally came. I heard a fancier at the Horticultural Hall say: "Chance what it is, I would pay something for two Norwich hens like it!" The "White Rose" is certainly superior in size, type and quality (in fact, everything but colour) to any Canary-Bullfinch yet bred. Who can expect to get the high colour on so clear a bird as you find on a dark specimen of any breed? When I called for my CAGE BIRDS last week, I asked if I could have a few extra copies; the clerk told me he had had a job to save this one, even though it was ordered. He asked: Is there something special in it? I replied: I don't know yet. On receiving it I said: Well, there's something in it the Germans have not produced yet, and both were made in Yorkshire. Good luck, old lad!

In Praise of the English-bred Roller Canary.

SIR,—I am pleased to inform you that through the medium of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, I have sold 90 Seifert Rollers, cocks and hens, and have many letters of thanks for quality and condition of my birds. I hope the Roller fanciers will bestir themselves and keep the tours of the Rollers up to contest pitch. I have always found the British-bred birds superior to the imported ones. I am looking forward to a successful breeding season, and wish the same to all Roller fanciers.

(MISS) M. THOMAS.

A Cage Bird Society for Pontypool.

SIR,—I thank you sincerely for the help you have rendered us in the formation of our society in placing it before the public through the medium of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, and I can assure you I advise every member to take the same weekly. I may tell you that Abersychan C.B.S. is about midway between Pontypool and Blaenavon, and Blaenavon is about five miles away, up on the mountains. Pontypool is the centre pivot, as it were, and it seems the place for a society, as I was a member of Abersychan myself, but could not induce fanciers to join, as it was going away from the town altogether, but many promised to join a society in Pontypool, so you will see the reason we started here and the result of only two meetings.

Do Small Fosters Mean Small Birds?

SIR,—I should be glad if any of the readers of CAGE BIRDS would tell me if they have ever tried the Border Fancy Canaries as feeders for rearing exhibition Norwich Plainheads. Last season I tried a pair or two, but though the eggs were from good-sized Norwich, I found the young did not come up to the size I thought they ought to have done. The Borders seemed to have fed well, but I wondered if they are considered large enough for the feeding of exhibition Norwich, and I should be pleased if anyone could enlighten me on the subject.

Birds in the Firing Line.

A Skylark's Nest Between the Trenches.

SIR,—Having been a regular reader of CAGE BIRDS, I thought the following would interest your readers. I might say that I am only a few yards from the German trenches, and while on sentry, looking for Germans, I noticed a pair of Skylarks hovering overhead; the hen bird seemed to be carrying food for her nestlings, while the cock bird was sky high, singing for all he was worth. The most remarkable thing was that their nest is in between our trench and the Germans', and the birds work all day seeking food for their little ones, heedless of the shelling and rifle fire, which goes on nearly all day. Since being out here I have noticed close to the firing lines the following birds: Chaffinches, Linnets, Yellowhammers, and Larks, also our friend the Blackbird, and they are all in full song. Another bird I saw was a Cuckoo flying very low towards a wood, and he was "cuckooing" all the time. This bird was the last in the world I thought of seeing anywhere near here. I will write again, so good-bye for the present, and good luck to CAGE BIRDS.

Lecture on colour feeding given by Mr. J. W. Ramsden, May 18. A very fine attendance of members and several friends were present. Mr. Ramsden was given a very hearty welcome, and his lecture was heartily received. There was not much, said Mr. Ramsden, that had not already been said in reference to colour feeding, so he (the lecturer) had brought a specimen colour bird and specimens and samples of natural and prepared colour food. A discussion followed, with great interest. A vote of thanks to Mr. Ramsden was carried. Mr. Ramsden replied, and a pleasant evening closed.—D. Keeps, Hon. Sec.

Breeding results are very favourable, and close upon 1,000 rings have been disposed of by the society. Next meeting a lecture will be given by Mr. Willows on the Training of the Roller for Exhibition. Vote of thanks to chair terminated an enjoyable meeting.—J. W. Thomson, Hon. Sec.

PONTYPOOL C.B.S.

Mason, Curtis, Smith, Prosser, Welsh and Dowell. These now make up our membership to 17, and we still hope to have a few more. A good deal of business was done in connection with the formation of the rules, etc., and a member kindly promised a donation of one guinea to our funds. A few questions were asked concerning colour feeding, and our chairman kindly consented to give an exhibition on the mixing of the same at next meeting June 19.—H. H. Vaughan, Hon. Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

At the May meeting further arrangements were made for the Young Bird Show, June 19, at headquarters. Decided to ask Mr. F. Bate to judge. Birds staged at 10 a.m. The suggestion to hold a second show in July at Longton was left for consideration at next meeting. Entry fee fixed at 7d. per cage, 1d. deducted towards staging fund. Extra classes were added for F.M. Linnet, Goldf. and Siskin, etc., Mr. Pitchford offers a brass cage, and Mr. Alcock a Wedgwood teapot for first and second most points with four highest birds at one N.F. Show and Annual Members' Winter Show, the highest point winner to have first choice. The thanks of the members were accorded to the donors of these prizes. Next meeting, June 7.—J. Pitchford.

HALIFAX C.B.S.

An air gun shooting match, Open v. Novices, was held May 26 in the King Cross Band Room, and proved very interesting. There was a capital turn-up of members, and the shooting was excellent, considering that most had not previously handled a gun, and some splendid scores were made. Out of a possible 40, with eight shots, the lowest score was 27 and the highest 35, while several 34 scores were made. The Open competitors proved the victors by 42 points. One of the novices has to shoot off yet, but even if he got a full score the open section wins. It is hoped that another match will soon be arranged. Thanks were given to the Trafalgar Air Gun Club for the use of the rifles and range.—A. Sutcliffe, Sec.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Council meeting, May 29, Mr. J. Butler chair. A good deal of discussion took place with regard to next season's shows and the sliding scale, some delegates being of the opinion that all entry money in classes of 14 and under should be paid in prizes, pointing out that the exhibitor was badly treated last season, and if this continued we should drive them away instead of encouraging them. On the other hand, delegates were anxious to know how societies were going to make ends meet in paying all entry money in prizes. The result of the voting was in favour of the sliding scale as last year viz., a penny in the shilling deducted in classes of fourteen and under, but that societies be allowed to give what specials they think fit, in lieu of paying money specials. Mr. J. Firth (Tong) was elected on the sub-committee in place of Mr. Brown. Mr. Errington again offered two valuable specials in each section for birds fed on his colour food, which were accepted with thanks. Full patronage was granted to the Bradford National Show, Dec. 3 and 4, where points for all the Union competitors will count. Tenders for printing the Union handbook were gone through, Mr. J. C. Southwart proving successful. A very interesting topic came up at the close of the meeting: "What are the qualifications of a novice?" I hope to give a few notes about it next week.—S. Midgley, Hon. Sec.

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Meeting, Marie Stuart Halls, Govanhill, May 26, Mr. R. Heggie chair. The attendance was very small. Final arrangements for F.F. Show were made, and it is hoped that members will endeavour to make it a record. A good number of specials have been promised. Any member changing his address might notify Secretary next meeting, July 3, at 3.—Edward Holliday, Sec.

NORTH-WEST GLASGOW C.B.C.

Meeting and lecture, Amalgamated Musician's Hall, Napiershall Street, May 25, Mr. Gibb presiding over a good attendance. Mr. Watson, Dennistoun, entertained the members to a very enjoyable and instructive lecture on British birds, dealing on wild seeds and hand-rearing and moulting of British birds. Mr. Watson had a very hot time with questions, and answered the same in a very practical manner. Ramble fixed for June 26, to Lochwinnock, train leaving St. Enoch 2.1; members and friends cordially invited. Further particulars can be had from secretary. Vote of thanks to chairman and lecturer brought a pleasant meeting to a close. —J. Houston, Sec.

SHEFFIELD (Amalgamated).

A full representative meeting of committee was held May 20, delegates from the Sheffield C.B.S., Walkley C.B.S., Attercliffe C.B.S., and Rotherham being present. Mr. Jones presided. The Foresters' Hall, Trippet Lane, was to be engaged for the show, and date fixed for Oct. 30. Messrs. Barnes and Mason, judges. No delegates being present from the Sheffield O.S., it was unanimously decided that the societies represented go on with the show without the S.O.S. Prizes, 6s., 4s., 2s., 1s., if 8 entries; 7 or less, half prize money; no cancelling or amalgamation. Entry fee 9d. Profits from the show will be given to the fund in most urgent need at the time. Classification: 4 classes each, young Yorks., old do., young Nor., old do., viz.: cl. or tkd. yell.; do. buff; mkd., yell. or buff; hen, any col. The Attercliffe delegates went strong for some classes for Green Yorks., and a separate section is to be allowed. Delegates to report at next meeting what was required. Crests and Mules were left, under the same conditions, to the Sheffield C.B.S. British: Goldf. or Bulif.; Greenf.; Linnet; Redpoll, Siskin, or Twite; A.O. Hardbill; Softbills, larger than Wheatear; do. Wheatear and smaller. Foreign were left on same conditions as Greens and Crests. No selling classes. Gift class, no entry fee; no prize money, but cards given. 10s. was promised towards a team trophy, the form to be considered later. Rules for same: 4 highest awards in the young Canary sections or British to count, and members to state distinctly on entry form which society they are showing for. Young Canaries to have been bred by exhibitor. Next meeting June 23, at 8.30. Each society is allowed three delegates. Vote of thanks to chair closed a very enthusiastic meeting.—C. Tomlinson, Assist. Sec. and Press

LEYTON C.B.A.

About 30 members and friends turned up for the annual ramble to Loughton, May 15. The day was fine, but rather dull, so not very much song was heard. Nests were found of the Blackbird, Thrush, Bullfinch, Linnet, Longtailed Tit, Chaffinch, Goldcrested Wren, and several others. Those of the Bullfinch were very scarce, whilst Linnets were plentiful. Arriving at the "Owl," an excellent repast was found ready, after which a musical evening was spent. Songs were well rendered by Messrs. Jeremiah, Bramble, East, Wilkins, Withers, Collinge, and Rhodes, and a clever character sketch was given by Mr. Perry. Mr. Carr presided at the piano. After singing the National Anthem, the party left for home at 9.30, the song of the Nightingale being heard on the way.—A. W. Farmer, Hon. Assist. Sec.

LAISTERDYKE, BOWLING AND TONG COMBINATION.

Ramble, May 23, to the Washburn Valley District, with only a very moderate turn-up. Under the guidance of Mr. G. Pownall, who had the route mapped out, we went across the moor, then visited the Almcliffs Craggs, a very enjoyable sight. Then we cut across the valley to Farnley, where we had tea. After all the outing was one of the best. Everybody enjoyed it, and are looking forward to Bank Holiday Sunday, to make another. But it is hoped that it will then comprise rather more train or tram, so that members can take their wives. I might say to those members who did not turn up and who wanted it to be a full day's ramble, that we started from home at 8 o'clock a.m., returned 12.10 midnight. I think this was full enough.—J. E. Hudson, Hon. Sec.

COLINTON & CURRIE PARISHES.

Fourth annual ramble (in conjunction with Edin. C.B.S. and Leith C.B.S.) through the woods of Dryhorn estate, Colinton, permission being kindly granted by Miss Stewart Clark. A good muster left Colinton station and walked to Dryhorn, where they met their guide, Mr. Smith, head gardener on the estate, who had kindly consented to accompany us. We took to the woods right away and were in our glory, nests in galore being seen. We had discovered twenty nests after we had been 15 minutes in the grounds, and we had to call a halt several times to gather our party together, so keen were they on the nests and so many being successful in getting finds. It fell to Mr. Brown, Sec. of the Leith Club, to have the find of the day, a nest containing four young Bullfinches about 10 days old; Bullfinches are very rare in this quarter. After another halt we set off on another strip of wood, and I think we would be safe to name this piece of wood the Chaffinch wood, as seldom have so many Chaffinch nests been seen together; in one bush alone there were three such nests, in fact 20 were found in about 50 yards. We found here a nest of eggs which caused quite a debate as to the bird they belonged to; but unfortunately we did not get a look at the bird. After finishing this strip of wood we arrived at the gardens, and here the gardener showed us two flower-pots, one containing a Wren's nest and the other a Swallow's; the two pots were hanging side by side, and the gardener told us these flower-pots have been occupied for the last fifteen years by a Wren and a Swallow. After passing through the gardens we came to another strip of wood, but by this time the company were beginning to feel the effects of hunger; nearly four hours romping in the woods had had its effect on them, and this strip of wood was not searched as it would have been earlier in the day. It was impossible to keep account of all the nests found; they were so plentiful that all agreed we had seen nearer 200 than 100. At Juniper Green tea was provided by the Juniper Green Co-op. Society, Ltd., in the Village Hall, and we did ample justice to it. After tea we spent an hour in song, songs being rendered by Messrs. Charlton, Brown, Napier, Hay, Ferguson, Galloway, Preston, Dickson and others, but as the members of the Edinburgh and Leith clubs had to catch the train we had to get a move on. The members of the Colinton and Currie Parishes O.S. accompanied them to the station, and all were delighted with their day's outing. It is hoped that another ramble will be arranged for July or August, when the gardens are in full bloom, Mr. Smith, our guide, being very anxious that we should come and see the place at its best, and if Miss Stewart-Clark will kindly grant us permission we shall be delighted to accept Mr. Smith's invitation.—J. Napier.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

TREE FOR AVIARY (E. P.).—A small fir or yew, or a large bushy plant of common box would be as suitable a thing in evergreens as you could have for your indoor aviary. In either case it would be best to have the shrub growing in a large pot or tub, so that you could take it into the open now and again to give it a good wash, as they are apt to become unsightly after a short stay in a well-stocked aviary. It would be a still better plan to have two separate shrubs grown in this manner, so that you could keep one in the open air to recuperate a little whilst the other was doing duty in the aviary, as the birds generally make short work of plants in an aviary.

SWELLING ROUND EYE (John Pawley).—You cannot properly treat the hen whilst she is bringing up a brood of young. Wait until the young are sufficiently developed to be left for the cock to finish their upbringing, which will be soon after they can get out of the nest. Then cage the hen alone, give every second day for a week or so, to clear the blood, a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flour ot sulphur and then sprinkled with maw seed. Also make a decoction by placing six or eight camomile flowers in a breakfast cup, fill up with boiling water, and allow it to infuse, covered over, beside the fire for an hour. Then strain off the clear liquor, and add a small teaspoonful of boracic acid to it. Bathe the eye with a little of this decoction once daily, using a drop of fresh liquor and a fresh wad of wool each time to bathe with, and burn at once that which you have used. See that the cage and perches are kept as clear as possible.

CANNOT PERCH (C. Taylor).—I hope your confidence in the advice you receive will be suitably rewarded, but, really, I am afraid you do not give me sufficient particulars about the bird's condition, especially about the condition of its feet and legs, for me to have so much confidence in the advice, which I can only give on somewhat general lines. Examine first the feet, to see if the claws are much overgrown, and if this is the case trim them back to a proper length with a small pair of nail scissors, after first bathing them well in warm water to clean them. If claws are not overgrown, bathe feet for a few minutes daily for a few days in a warm solution of wych hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of warm water. After bathing, dry gently, and anoint them sparingly with boracic ointment. Also see that the perches are of a proper size and shape, and securely fixed in position. For three days add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice to the drinking water, and after this give instead twenty drops of Chemical Food in the water two days in every three for a month. Give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it every third day for a month, and a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats twice a week, in addition to its staple diet of plain canary seed.

SITTING WITHOUT LAYING (J. Tabraham).—Sorry to discourage you, but I do not think you have a ghost of a chance of succeeding this season with these birds, even if you do any good with them any more. They are probably past their utility stage as breeding stock, and the best advice I can give you is to clear them out and start afresh with a stud of healthy, vigorous, young stock. The hens may be turned to some useful account if you have any clutches of eggs deserted by other hens, by placing them under these hens, which will in all probability hatch out and rear the young quite well. If you have no such eggs, try to get a clutch of wild Finch's eggs—Linnet or Greenfinch—and give them to hatch and rear. It is just probable that after rearing a brood in this way they may nest and lay on their own account, although I am not over-sanguine about it.

NOT FEEDING (Roby, 146).—As the hen has failed you twice, both with and without the cock being left with her to assist in the rearing, the only rational method is to endeavour to have another hen available to undertake the duty of rearing the next brood of young. If this is not practicable, you must tempt her as much as possible with a variety of green food and soft foods. In a general way, treat her the same as advised to "Trip" in last issue, and for green food give a small strip young leaf of lettuce, or a few of the flowering tips of groundsel. Do not omit the calin bath; be very careful that the caked rape does not become sour; and do not interfere with her more than is quite unavoidable. Take the cock away again as soon as she commences to sit.

LOSS OF VOICE (G. Hayden).—Giving a bath daily through the winter would not necessarily cause a robust bird to lose its voice. You should see that it does not hang where it is exposed to a direct cold draught, nor the fumes of burning lights. Especially, you should avoid hanging it in a window. Every third day, for a month if necessary, give, in addition to the usual seed diet, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. Add five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre to the drinking water every second day for a fortnight. After this give instead for another fortnight as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice every second day. For green food give either seedy chickweed or the green seed heads of shepherd's purse as soon as you can get them.

Mrs. A. M. WALKER.—Replied to by post.

PULLS HIS FEATHERS (Rochester).—If you are quite satisfied that the cage and its surroundings are free from red mites and have also examined the bird and found it free from grey lice, now give it a staple diet of plain canary seed only, with just a pinch of summer rape placed on top of it every second day, and on the alternating days give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts niger, teazle, and millet. Give a spray of chickweed or groundsel daily, and allow the bird to bathe as freely as it likes. In the drinking water add twelve drops of fluid magnesia every second day for a fortnight. Stick a piece of cuttlefish in the wires for it to peck at, and thus help to prevent the feather picking becoming a habit.

LIE FLAT ON PERCH (Jack, Watford).—I'm afraid I cannot tell you why your young Yorkshires lie flat on the perch or bottom of cage without some details to go on. Are the feet in perfect condition, or the toes cramped or deformed. See that the perches are of a proper size and shape, and that they are securely fixed so that they do not wobble about when the birds move on them. Stop giving soaked canary seed. Give a staple of plain, dry canary seed. Each morning place on top of this a teaspoonful of dry summer rape for each four birds. Give also a heaped teaspoonful of egg food to each four birds each morning, and in the afternoon throw out any that is left, and give in its place a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts lightly cracked hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give a few seed heads of dandelion or seedy sprays of chickweed daily, and keep a piece of cuttlefish stuck in the wires for them to peck at. Offer the bath daily now the weather is more reliable and settled. For three consecutive days you may add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and ten drops of lemon juice to the drinking water.

A QUARTETTE (V. H. Jackson).—(1) Treat the Yorkshire cock the same as advised to "R.W.J." in this issue for two or three weeks. I cannot advise you to mate him until at least two or three weeks after he has quite recovered from the moulting. Neither do I think you would be well advised to mate the Norwich hen that keeps bare of feathers with him. If mated at all she should have as mate a profuse and densely feathered cock, but as the bareness seems to be the result of a weakly condition it would be best not to mate her at all. (2) The Border hen is clearly out of breeding condition, and I doubt if you will be able to do anything with her. Give a small teaspoonful of egg food with about half the same quantity of mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed in it to the pair every second day for a month if necessary, or until she has gone to nest. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, millet, and a quarter part of mustard. Give a young growing stool of dandelion daily. Add 20 drops of syrup of buckthorn to the water for one day, and then give six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid and three of tincture of steel for three or four days. (3) Treat this hen the same as No. 2 for two or three weeks, or until she has laid her clutch of eggs. (4) Treat the Mules the same as advised to "Rochester" in this issue, and if not better in, say a month, send a separate query for Mr. Norman's department, to which it properly belongs.

ROAD TO SUCCESS (Outdoor Aviary).—I certainly think that the use of the egg yolk only, without any other admixture, may be the cause of your losses. One can have too much of a good thing. As you have the birds all flying together, it is useless to try to supply any particular modifications in the diet or general management, to suit young at different ages, neither is it so necessary with birds bred under these conditions. As regards the bath, you may put this in daily for an hour or so, irrespective of the age of young ones in the nests or of hens that may be sitting. In like manner you may disregard the principle of supplying only yolk of egg and no green food during the first three or four days after hatching. Give an unlimited supply of canary and summer rape seed, in separate vessels to avoid waste. Give a little mixed seed two or three times a week. When young in nests are very numerous you may put in a fair supply of cracked hemp daily. If you still prefer to use the desiccated egg yolk, add to half a pound of it a pound of crushed maizena wafer biscuits, or bread crumb dried to a light brown in an oven. The latter forms an excellent food. Slightly damp sufficient quantity of this for immediate use, sprinkle with maw seed, and put in the aviary every morning and afternoon; or fresh three times a day if time permits. Give also a liberal supply of seedy greenstuff fresh twice a day, and a little soaked rape or bread, and milk may be given according to your discretion. But if the former is given you must be careful not to allow it to remain in aviary long, as it becomes sour in an exceedingly short time in warm weather. If you follow these few general hints you should have no difficulty in rearing the young to maturity.

COLOUR FOR SHOW CAGE (A. Williams).—The proper colour of a show cage for clear buff and ticked yellow Norwich is just the same, viz., sky blue, or what is sometimes termed a bluey-green, for the inside, the colour of a Hedge sparrow's egg is a good type to follow. The outsides and the wires should be painted black.

CANARY QUERISTS

should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1½); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

STARTING THE HOBBY (C.G.D.).—You cannot do better than thoroughly digest the contents of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which you say you have ordered. If you mean that you feed wholly upon egg food this is not correct. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape mixed together. In addition to this, give each pair a teaspoonful of egg food with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it every second day until they have laid their clutches of eggs. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats, with just a sprinkling of mustard seed. Give a few dandelion seed heads or a stool of young growing dandelion daily. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in the cages for them to peck at. Beyond this I think the elder pair of birds require only a little patience, and they will get to work before long. At the same time if you are sure that the younger couple are a true pair, I think you would do better to mix the two pairs, mating the last year's cock with the old hen, and vice versa, unless the old hen shows signs of nesting at once, in which case leave them alone.

DISTEMPER AND COLOUR (F. H. P.).—Hall's Distemper is quite suitable for doing the insides of show and stock cages, and is not injurious. I daresay the same can be said of the other brand you name, or of any well-known brand on the market, but I have no personal experience with the second brand you name. For stock cage I prefer a light shade of electric green or autumn green, though a light blue or bluish-grey gives a nice appearance, and in badly lighted rooms white may be the most suitable colour in order to make the most of what light is available. For show cages sky blue is the most useful colour, but for gold Lizards asure blue is best, and for silver Lizards a moss green. By the way, a good enamel, with little gloss, is much better than distemper for show cages, on account of its extra wearing qualities.

DROPPING FEATHERS (R. W. J.).—Certainly it will be wise to stop the feathers falling, as this is not a proper moult. See that the bird is not exposed to direct draughts nor to extremes of heat and cold. In addition to its staple seed diet give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a fortnight. On the alternate days give a morsel of banana and a young growing stool of dandelion. In the drinking water dissolve a crystal of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea every second day, and on the alternating days give instead six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of gentian, until the feathers cease dropping. Allow the bird to bathe freely every day if it desires to do so.

YOUNG DYING (Outdoor). — Sorry, but without more details as to the circumstances attending the deaths, I cannot tell just why your young birds should all have died. I expect the hens did not feed them, and if that is so, it would have been useful to know whether the cocks were left with them whilst the hens were sitting. Your dietary does not seem to be at all suitable, and this may be indirectly the cause of the trouble. As it is not possible to go into all details in this column I cannot advise you better than to get a copy of our handbook, "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager will send you for 7d., post free, and follow the directions therein implicitly. Meantime give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape only, and mixed seed and egg-food only when they are preparing to nest or have young to feed at this season. Drop all linseed out of the dietary, and do not give these birds dandelion as green food. If the cocks were left with the hens last time remove them next as soon as the hens commence to sit, and leave the hens to hatch out and rear the young by themselves. You might also see reply to "Roby, 146," in this issue.

HEN LOST VOICE (E. A., Bristol).—See reply to "G. Hayden" in this issue, which will apply equally well to your case, and you can follow advice given therein entirely. If not successful in two or three weeks write again, and I will advise you further.

BROKEN EGGS, ETC. (W. H. S.).—(1) I cannot say why the hen dropped her eggs from the perch instead of laying them in the nest. It is an idiosyncrasy which even our wild birds are not wholly free from. But in the case of this hen, it might have well been due to an abnormal condition of the oviduct which eventually resulted in an attack of anal prolapse, which is what the bird suffered from after laying the third egg. The condition is due to a variety of causes—general weakness, efforts to expel an obnormally large egg, or an egg without shell. You might have relieved the condition, but it is not easily curable, and if a bird is not of any exceptional value it is better to mercifully end its existence. (2) With ordinary attention to cleanliness you could keep from 20 to 25 birds the size of a Norwich Canary in this aviary, therefore a dozen will not be too many. By the way, you should have said whether you refer to British or Foreign birds in this query. If you repeat the query, giving this information, the proper expert will gladly tell you what birds you can mix together in order to avoid quarrelling.

HOLE IN NECK (J. Marsden).—I am not clear whether the bird has had an abscess removed from its neck, or whether the skin merely presents that appearance. If the latter it may simply be due to a wasting of the tissues causing the bird to be exceedingly thin. Try the following treatment for two or three weeks, and note result. If bird is not considerably better, please write again, and give full details as to the appearance of the skin. Also say if an abscess has really been removed from that part. First examine the feet to see if any deformity, or overgrown claws, is the cause of the bird not perching, and look also into the condition of the eyes, and see that the perches are of a proper size and shape, well-fitting, and made of a nice soft wood. In addition to the usual seed diet give a morsel of bread and milk with three drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed, every second day, and on the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and broken groats. Give a little green food daily. In the drinking water add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea and six drops of syrup of rhubarb, every second day for a week, and after this give instead six drops each of tincture of gentian and aromatic sulphuric acid, every second day for a fortnight. Offer the bath on fine days.

A QUESTION OF FITNESS (H.R.).—Many thanks for your letter and kind remarks. Am very glad to know the advice given was so helpful. As regards the noise the bird still makes, it may take some little time for it to quite disappear. If it quite throws off this trouble and remains healthy and active, there is no reason why he should not be quite fit for breeding next season. Only too pleased to be of assistance any time.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

BREEDING BULLFINCH-CANARY HYBRIDS (Redmond O'Hanlan).—The chances are very much against your eggs being fertile, as you are mating the wrong way to produce this cross. The cock Bullfinch is a notoriously bad breeder when in confinement, consequently the hen only is used by hybrid breeders. Should any of your eggs be fertile, you must supply the hen with egg food, made with hard-boiled eggs, stale sponge cake, and a little best insectile food as used for Warblers. She should also have plenty of seeding grass and other wild food. I shall be glad to hear if you are successful in hatching young, but I am somewhat doubtful.

FITTING UP INDOOR AVIARY (H. T. H.).—Before going too far with your aviary, it would pay you to get our book on the subject, as there are many little items dealt with in it that it is impossible to give you in these limited replies. Perches should be plentiful, and placed mostly at the ends of the aviary, so as to give the birds plenty of exercise in flying from one to the other; they should be of various thicknesses. Branches of trees are particularly suitable, and assist in giving the place a rustic appearance. Self-filling seed boxes are mostly used, and these should be placed so as to be quite out of reach of mice. If you can manage it, put the water vessels outside as they are not so liable to become contaminated with the birds' droppings, and they are much more easily attended to. Nesting boxes should be plentiful, and mostly placed in quiet corners, and see that a suitable perch is fixed near them.

BREEDING LINNET-CANARY MULES (W. H. Bird).—As you are quite a novice in Mule rearing, I would advise you to get our book on "The Secrets of Hybrid Breeding," 1s. 2d. post free. (1) The eggs take fourteen days to incubate. (2) It is almost impossible to say how much pepper it takes to colour feed a single bird, because some birds require more than others, and as a rule a fancier mixes his food for quite a number at once, but, speaking generally, a 1lb. tin would colour feed about a dozen birds. (2) All young birds moult in the autumn, the early hatched ones having a longer period between their leaving the nest and the moult than the later ones. Young birds usually commence to cast their nest feathers when from eight to ten weeks old. Much depends upon the health and constitution of the bird as to the duration of the moult. A strong, healthy, robust bird gets over it much more quickly than a delicate specimen. As a rule, it is finished before cold weather sets in, excepting in the case of very late hatched birds.

TREATING A BULLFINCH (A.M.).—(1) The hen Skylark certainly warbles a little, but it is nothing compared to the glorious melody of the cock bird. (2) I am glad to hear you have a really good Bullfinch, but as to treatment I think you would do well to get our Nutshell No. 11, which deals with this bird, and gives you all the information you require in much more detail than I can in these short answers. Until you get it, feed him on canary, teazle, and rape, with plenty of seeding wild food, such as chickweed, shepherd's purse, groundsel, seeding grass, etc., and let him bathe frequently. If after you have read the booklet there should be any little point you are not quite clear about, I shall be pleased to assist you.

should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2, "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4, "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Moult British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GOLDFINCH AND CANARY NOT NESTING (C.H.).—You cannot do better than continue your method of feeding, added to it a spoonful of soaked seeds three times a week. Many Goldfinches do not breed until late in the season, and for this reason most fanciers take a brood of Canaries from the hen before mating her with the Goldie. (2) Dandelion heads are without doubt one of the best foods we have at this time of the year for Finches. These would not be the cause of the death of your birds unless you gave them to them very early in the morning. For several mornings now we have had sharp frosts, and any food gathered before the sun has dispersed frost is dangerous to birds.

CHAFFINCHES UNDER CANARIES (J.W.B.).—These are about the most difficult of the Finches to rear under Canaries, but it has been successfully accomplished, and there is no reason why you should not succeed if you happen to have a good feeding hen. Procure a pound of the best insectile food as used for Nightingales, etc., and while the hen is sitting give her just a pinch of this, made crumbly moist, so that she gets quite used to it, as a soft food. When the young hatch make a mixture of hard-boiled egg, stale sponge cake, and insectile food, and slightly damp it with fresh new milk or diluted condensed. After the first three or four days hunt round your garden for colonies of green fly, scrape these off, or break the twig off upon which they are, and hand-feed the young ones with them two or three times a day, giving small caterpillars later in addition. When you find a twig nicely loaded with green fly stick it between the front bars of the cage and see if the Canary will take them. I once had a couple of hens that would feed the young ones with them whenever offered, and if yours will do so it saves disturbing the hen and brood.

PAINTING SHOW CAGES (A. Williams).—The colour to paiut the interior of your cage to exhibit the cock Goldie, cock Bullie, and Goldfinch-Bullfinch hybrid would be a rather bright middle green. A good guide for the tone is a fresh laurel leaf, not the ones at the end of the branch, but about three or four leaves down. Copy this as near as you can, being careful not to make it too yellow in tone. For the other two mules a light blue-grey is admirable, making it a shade darker for the Light Goldfinch, so as to form a contrast in tone between bird and background. The way to test it is to place the bird in the cage, stand four or five feet away, and look at it with half-closed eyes; you will then easily detect if you have the right depth. Remember the bird is the main object to be seen, not the background.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

NOT TALKING (Oldham).—From your enclosures you certainly would have a claim against the vendor; you would only have to prove that it had not talked since you received it to succeed, unless the second guarantee, of which the later communication speaks, is of a different character. So far, so good, and you must make your own decision as to whether you retain the bird or not. A tame, healthy bird, such as you describe, is worth the sum named, but I am really surprised such a bird has not mimicked some of the calls, noises and words it has heard while with you, even supposing, for the sake of argument, that it was not a talker previous to coming to you. Even now my opinion is that it will yet prove responsive and pick up the various words and calls it hears. From the enclosures I should say the person concerned would change the bird for you if you wish it—it is a pity you cannot go over and pick out a bird which you hear talk. However, as your bird is healthy, tame, and also a young one, I am almost inclined to advise you to keep it, and talk to it whenever you feed and fuss about with it generally, also keep it in your living room, where it will have plenty of company and hear much conversation, and it should ultimately talk. It is not cruel to chain them to a stand if you procure a proper chain and swivel, but a daily fly round the room is of great benefit to a bird, even though it may be inconvenient for them to be left to go in and out of cage at will. Finally, if you are not satisfied to wait for the bird to pick up words with you, you must compel (if necessary) the vendor to exchauge it, and I certainly advise, even if it is inconvenient, your going over unannounced and picking out a bird you hear talk, and which generally meets your requirements.

DIETARY FOR GREEN PARROT (Heywood).—It is really best to keep two stock mixtures: No. 1, equal parts of giaut canary seed and white millet. No. 2, equal parts of oats, safflower, sunflower, hemp, dari and shelled nuts. You can either supply these two mixtures in separate tins, and leave the bird to help itself from either at will, or take equal parts of each mixture and mix them together for use. In addition, you can supply any kind of ripe fruit it will take, also a handful of flowering grass and weeds for it to pick over, while you can get them untainted by frost; pieces of biscuit, crusts of stale bread, and plain cake. If the bird prefers the crust or biscuit moistened, then lightly moisten it with chemical food and water. Clear water must be its drink, and any time you notice any signs of constipation, put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia into it for one day; in fact, so long as there is not undue looseness. It is a good plan to give the magnesia once a week as a corrective. Cuttle bone and grit must be continually in the cage. It is also good practice to keep a fairly thick piece of a branch in the cage for it to exercise its beak upon. The above will keep up a sufficiently varied range of dietary.

SAMPLES OF SAND (E. A. B. N.).—So far as one can judge from an ordinary examination, the sand, as cleaned and mixed by you, is suitable for use in your cages. Of course, sand gathered from a sewage polluted river or estuary should be avoided, but this is a risk one has to take, and the samples sent, unless obtained from polluted ground, are very suitable for your purpose.

BUDGERIGAR WHEEZING (Miss Leake).—I am afraid the trouble has almost become chronic, and that in every sudden change from warm to cool it will become apparent. It would be better to separate the pair for about fourteen days, and better still, to keep them in separate rooms out of hearing of each other. Keep the ailing bird in a warmish room, yet where it can get light and air without draught. Every third day put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water; and on the intervening days put half-a teaspoonful of the following mixture in the water: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine, in equal parts. Supply the usual dietary and a handful of seeding and flowering grass daily. Then if the trouble is relieved, you could put them together again (i.e., after the fourteen days), and put into their drinking water, every other day, half-a teaspoonful syrup of phosphates, and one teaspoonful of the fluid magnesia in the water once a week, continuing same for a month at least. If the bird is weak and thin, it would be well to give it several drops of cod liver oil emulsion direct to the beak daily, till it is in condition again.

BUDGERICARS NOT NESTING (Ditton).—You do not say how long they have been in their present quarters; it may be they have not as yet settled down, or they are not yet in breeding condition. When in breeding condition the cere, round the nostrils, is bright blue in the male, and varies from cream colour to ruddy brown in the female. You have space to accommodate about 30 Budgerigars in your aviary, and it would be well to add two more pairs, but procure each of these pairs from a different source, and do not get either from the same source as you got the first two pairs. The aviary arrangements promise well, and the open part, unless there is a draught, need only be covered during exceptionally severe weather. Of course, if the open part occasions a draught, it will be bad for the birds at all seasons of the year, but unless there are open windows or gaps in the front part of the shed, which occasion a through current from the back portion to the front, there should not be any trouble from this cause. Give them a liberal supply of green food, including plenty of seeding and flowering grass. The nesting season for them in captivity extends from March to October,, and often is even longer, so there is plenty of time for you. But get your extra pairs at once, and do uot accept any save those of large size, perfect feather and silken plumage (do not be persuaded to have any which are in poor feather, or said to he in moult, even at a gift), and are clear and alert in every respect.

BREEDING ROSELLAS (J. M., jun.).—Providing the eggs prove fertile, any young hatched out should be duly reared. The seed mixture you are giving will suffice in that respect, supply green food fresh twice daily, a little fruit, banana, and sweet apple, if they will eat it, and keep a saucer of broken biscuits in the aviary. It would perhaps be well to supply oats separately under your conditions and keep up a continuous supply. While young are being fed to ensure food to their liking, the biscuit could be lightly watered with a fine rose watercan, not to make it soppy, merely to slightly moisten it. You might also supply a little sunflower seed if you can obtain same in your locality.

WHAT PARROT, VALUE, ETC.? (I. R. F.).—I can now give you a definite reply. It is, as I suggested in my first reply, an Alexandrine Parrakeet, a hen bird I should say. Values are very variable, but as it is a talented bird, it should have a minimum value of 50s., and a maximum of 80s. A seed mixture of canary, white millet, oats, wheat, dari, hemp, and sunflower seeds will about meet its requirements; if you take 2 parts of each of the first three kinds, and one part each of others, and well mix together; then mix a pint of shelled monkey nuts to each gallon of mixture. Also supply pieces of biscuit, plain cake, stale crusts, ripe fruit, and a little green food. Grit (not sand), water and cuttlebone should always be in the cage, also a thick piece of a branch for it to exercise its mandibles upon. It will pick up other words from the conversation it hears going on around it, also special phrases by the constant repetition method.

WHAT PARROTS? (Novice A. S.).—Your birds are Roseate Cockatoos, and though many individuals scarcely talk at all, some make really talented birds, and yours being quite young, they should develop into birds of the latter category. You cannot sex them till they become adult—the colour of their irises will vary, and the beak of the female will be a little short and stouter, and the upper mandible with a shorter terminal hook, than that of the male. A seed mixture of giant canary seed, white millet, oats, wheat, maize, hemp, and sunflower seeds; when mixed, add a pint of shelled monkey nuts to each gallon of the mixture. It can also have ripe fruit (any kind it will take), apple and banana are good; stale crusts, biscuit, plain cake, walnuts and occasioual Brazil nuts, green food. Grit, cuttlebone and water should be continually in the cage, also a thick piece of a branch for it to exercise its mandibles upon. It is a hardy species, but must not be subjected to draught. By the way, you must not change the diet they have been accustomed to too suddenly; such changes should be gradual.

BUDGERIGARS IN AVIARY CAGE (Espliance).—You should not get any more, as your cage is fully stocked; will be overcrowded while young are being reared once nesting begins. Keep the cage where there will not be a current of air through it—such currents usually exist between door and window, and fireplace and window—at the same time the birds must have light and air. Tufts of flowering and seeding grass are the best green food you can give them, and if you can get the tufts with the roots on, so that the grass will stand up on its roots, they will take to it the sooner. Grass seeds (half-ripe and ripe) are their natural food, and in Australia they only breed when it is available. So long as they are not subjected to draught they are absolutely hardy, and do not need coddling, but the muslin fastened over the back would ensure them more privacy for nesting purposes. They will settle down ultimately; you will have to exercise patience, and let them take their own time. Do not take out either of the husks, leave all three in; they do not use any nesting material.

COLD AND CONSTIPATION (E. E. C.).—I am pleased to hear of so great an improvement. As regards the stopped nostril there are two courses open to you (1) to spray it daily with the glycothymoline solution, and leave time and nature to do the rest; or (2) to let a vet. see and remove the obstruction for you. You have done quite right in ceasing to give the sop. Keep it strictly out of draught, yet where it will get light and air, and in a fairly warm room. I should continue the treatment for a little longer, of course, omitting the sop. You must keep a close watch against constipation, and at the least sign of the voiding becoming still and hard, give a dose, or doses, of fluid magnesia to correct same. Seed mixture: one pint each giaut canary, white millet, hemp, oats, and shelled monkey nuts; half a pint each of wheat, dari, safflower and sunflower seeds—well mix, and keep a supply in the cage. So long as obtainable, give fresh fruit, apple and banana are very wholesome, most Parrots prefer the former, and it could have a fair sized piece daily. You can give it green peas and lettuce; cut away the fleshy centre rib from the lettuce before supplying to the bird; also give it garden weeds and flowering and seeding grass to pick over . You must not forget to keep up a constant supply of grit and cuttlebone, and also a thick piece of a branch of a tree for it to exercise its mandibles upon. During the warm weather give it a light spraying daily, using tepid water and a little quassia solution—when the air is chilly, omit the spraying. During the cold months, once or twice a week, choosing a genial day, is often enough to spray it.

GREENHOUSE TO AVIARY (Ishmael).—The first step is, cover the whole of the glass with wire netting on the inside. Then you must cover the roof glass with felt on the outside for the purpose of keeping it cool in summer, and as warm as possible in winter. A good large sash in the front, or the whole of one end, should be made to open outwardly, to be left open during the summer months, but closed at night during the winter; it can be open during genial weather in winter in the day time. You will require to take out the staging and to line the back with twiggy branches. You had better get two pairs of Budgerigars for a beginning, a cock Red-crested Cardinal (for variety), and a pair of White Java Sparrows. Do not put in more at first, as once they begin to breed your stock of Budgerigars will soon increase. By the way, procure each pair from a different source, then your young birds can be left to interbreed without fear of deterioration. If you care to send me a rough plan of the greenhouse showing position of window and door, together with a stamped addressed envelope per the Editor, I will send you a rough diagram showing how it should be fitted up.

BUDGERIGARS NOT BREEDING (Little Jap).—A single pair of Budgerigars will ultimately breed in a cage, but take longer to settle down to nesting than two or three pairs would in a larger cage or flight. Again, if the temperature of the conservatory is very variable, owing to the effect of the sun's rays, etc., this would be likely to set up irregular moults, and throw them back in other ways. Place the cage in the coolest, airiest and lightest part of the conservatory, but, though absolutely hardy, they must not be in a draught. When the cere of the hen is ruddy brown, it indicates breeding condition, and the cere going bluish indicates that it has gone out of condition for the time being. See other replies on Budgerigars in this issue. You will have to exercise your patience; the breeding season in captivity extends to October and even later.

The fittings of the Aviary, the kind of birds to keep, and their requirements in the way of food and accommodation are all described, and there is an illustration of an outdoor aviary which is at once inexpensive, roomy, and adequate in every respect.

Societies who require the patronage of the Northern Crested Club kindly send in their applications to me, writes Geo. Dobson, hon. sec., 103, James Street, Blaydon-on-Tyne.

The Darlington C.B.S. has fixed the date of its next open show for Nov. 27. We should be glad, writes Mr. F. Stothard, sec., if other societies will take note, to avoid clashing as far as possible, in their own interest as well as ours.

We shall be very pleased to hear of anyone wishing to take part in any of our rambles, which we hope to hold every third week, writes Mr. J. Alderslade, sec., Eastleigh C.B.S., 64, Desborough Road, Eastleigh. (See Club Report).

Kindly inform members of the Northern Yorkshire C.C., writes Mr. R. Tindale, the hon. sec., that Mr. Crawhall has a stock of Ramsden's colour food at same price as in previous years. Members are advised that it will not be possible to obtain more at the old price.

The Cage Birds watch I bought from you several months ago is a splendid timekeeper. I would recommend all who want a cheap and reliable watch to go in for one; Mr. Hostler, of Halstead, tells me he is perfectly satisfied, and thanks me for my recommendation. A. Draper, Halstead.

Societies desirous of obtaining the patronage of the Northern Border Fancy C.C. are invited to send in their applications with classification and judges as soon as possible, writes Mr. Chas. Farrer, hon. sec., 222, Jefferson Street, Newcastle. The patronage is open to all societies in the five Northern Counties. Lovers of the "wee gem" inside radius are invited to become members; subs., 2s. 6d.

The Guisbro' Priory C.B.S. is having its first young stock show on June 12, judge Mr. G. R. Barker, writes Mr. A. Knaggs, Sec. Fanciers and friends in district invited.

The North Liverpool C.B.S. will ramble to Simonswood on Sunday, June 13, writes Mr. E. S. Broadbent, Hon. Sec. Meet at Fazakerley car terminus at 11. Friends and local club members heartily welcomed.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Yorkshire C.C. should apply on or before June 19, giving date of show and name of judge, writes Mr. John Greaves, sec., 279, Hollings Road, Bradford. A meeting of the committee will be held on that date to allocate same.

In "Twitterings" of May 22, writes Mr. J. Peacock, hon. sec. Sunderland C.B.A., you stated I had moved from 6 to 20, Whitburn Terr., Sunderland, which should be 20, Whitburn Terr., Fulwell, Sunderland. I would thank you to correct this as there is such an address in Sunderland as well.

The Sheffield O.S. will held the annual Nest Feather show June 26. Mr. J. Robson judge, writes Dr. W. Craig. Through the generosity of the treasurer all exhibitors will be presented with a ticket for free tea at Cordwell Valley on Aug. 1st, when the next ramble will take place. Full particulars by personal application only from the Sec. on the show day at Foresters' Hall.

Kindly accept thanks for the splendid drawing of my winning Blackbird; there is no doubt about it, it is like life, and a credit to your artist, Mr. Norman. The bird is quite a youngster, just two years of age, so looks like having a good time yet amongst the prizes. I am sorry to say that I lost my old Palace winner at the great age of 9½ years; he died during last moult, not a bad age was it? On the frontispiece you have me hailing from Swansea; kindly state that Cardiff has been my domicile this last 30 years. H. J. Ford, Cardiff.

Watford C.B.S. has arranged for a ramble on Sunday next, June 14, to Ley Hill Common, near Chesham, Bucks; friends who would like to participate will be heartily welcomed. Train leaves Baker Street Station (Met. Rly.), 9.45, for Chalfont Road. The Watford party leave High Street Station at 9.30 for Rickmansworth to meet this train. The Common abounds in bird life, and there will be ample scope for those who are experts in locating nests of such as the Stonechat, Meadow Pipit, Whitethroat and Bullfinch, these species being greatly in evidence in the neighbourhood.

Owing to delays on rail, customers should place their orders for Ramsden's Pure Peppers at once—present stock cannot be replaced except at heavy increase in price. I believe I am the only importer who has been able to land a stock of this season's tasteless pepper. A search of the Customs entry failed to trace any other importation. Any bonafide trader can supply Ramsden's Pure Peppers provided he is satisfied with a reasonable commission, and is prepared to pay cash with order during the continuance of the war.—J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London.

Come Along: Hybrid Breeders.

Thanks for your very kind letter received last week congratulating me on my success in rearing the Song Thrush Blackbird Hybrids, writes Mr. T. H. Anderson, Darvel. I will be pleased to receive the medal, and will prize it as coming from such an authority as the Editor of Cage Birds. I appreciate your kind offer, and trust that such an offer will encourage others to try for other rare crosses among our feathered pets.

The Starling Outlawed

In a discussion by the Worcestershire Chamber of Agriculture on the desirability of erasing the Starling from the list of birds in the Wild Birds' Protection Act, the chairman said this bird did an immense amount of damage, but before any steps were taken proof to that effect was required. Ultimately a resolution to the effect that the Starling should not be included in the list of protected birds was carried.

The June number of "British Birds," Messrs. Weatherby and Co., High Holborn, 1s. monthly, opens a new volume, No. 9. It contains an important list of alterations and additions to the "Hand-list of British Birds, 1912," which is, of course, indispensable to all possessors of that work. There is an article by Miss Haviland, "Notes on the Breeding-Habits of the Grey Phalarope," with photographs by the author, and the number contains a most interesting list by Mr. R. M. Barrington extending back to 1885, recording the occurrences of Redstarts at light stations in Ireland. From this we gather that the earliest date of arrival of the common Redstart is April 22, and its latest departure Nov. 19, while the earliest arrival of the Black Redstart is Sept. 19, and the latest departure June 15.

Southern Border F.C. Patronage

As several Secs. of Societies have written me to say that they have not yet fixed the date for their annual show, but wish for the S.B.F.C. patronage, writes Mr. Geo. Burton, Hon. Sec., 126, Lee Road, Lee Green, S.E., it has been decided to postpone the alloting of patronage till the June meeting. I shall be pleased to receive other applications on or before June 22, more especially from societies who have had our patronage in the past. I am sure they only require this reminder to apply, as our section is always the attraction of any show, and the classes always fill.

OBITUARY.

MR. THOS. ARNOT (Hawick).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. W. B. Smart, sec. Border Fancy C.C., that I have to inform you of the death of one of the oldest members of the B.F.C.C., Mr. Thomas Arnot, Hawick, who passed away on June 5, and was buried to-day, June 7. Mr. Arnot was a life-long fancier, his favourites being the "Wee Gems." He was a great breeder of Greens, and for a number of years was the leading man in this variety. He was associated with the Border Fancy Club from its formation, and always up to the last took a very keen interest in its welfare. As a judge he was always very popular, and gave his decisions without fear or favour. He always took a great interest in the welfare of novice members. He was of a kindly nature, and those who knew him best will miss him most. I am sure I am voicing the feelings of every member of the Club, and the Fancy generally, when I say the deepest sympathy goes out to Mrs. Arnot and family in their sad bereavement.

Mr. G. W. Brown, Leith, also sends a sympathetic reference to the decease of this well-known and highly-respected fancier and judge.—Editor, "C.B."

"Joe" the Kensington Gardens Magpie.

Where Joe came from nobody knows, but he suddenly appeared one bright spring day, and proceeded to make all his own a patch of the woodland some distance west of the Albert Memorial. He has been six years in the gardens, and the story of his life is one long record of infamy. In the years he has been in the gardens no fewer than six wives have been found. But Joe has assassinated the lot, and at last it is recognised that he is a misogynist. He will be provided with no more wives. At present Joe is undisputed lord of his neighbourhood. A nice gentleman in a silk hat feeds him every morning with little pieces of meat, and Joe, now that he is not bothered with fussy lady Magpies, is quite happy. He is known to have a nest of wonderful treasures somewhere, but nobody knows where it is.—"Evening Standard."

The Travels of Six Song Thrushes.

A friend of mine ringed many young Thrushes in the Fylde last year, and no fewer than six, all ringed as fledglings, have been recovered. One, found this April near Preston, may, or may not, have been a journey, but three found near Blackpool and Fleetwood in November and February had probably remained within a few miles of their home, for during the winter migratory Thrushes are abroad. A fifth bird had taken a short sea journey, for it was found in Roscommon in December; but a sixth had left our islands altogether, and was recovered in Spain in its first autumn. The conclusion is obvious; it is useless to lay down rules and make dogmatic statements about the movements of birds, at any rate of Song Thrushes. Birds have far more individuality than many ornithologists give them credit for, and one may elect to stay near home, another wander for a short distance only, whilst a third may indulge in extended travel. When I hazarded this suggestion some years ago in a little book on "Migration," critics flouted me, but critics are not always right.—F.Z.S. in the "Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury."

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

The Wagtail's Curving Flight.

The Finches and Wagtails are good fliers, and have a method of their own, not, we think, to be observed in any larger bird except the Magpie. In their longer flights they ascend the air at an easy angle, and then fall with closed wings, and so progress, rising and falling alternately. It is a pretty sight to see a Pied Wagtail, in the blue of the summer sky, rising and dipping in perfect cadence with its own faintly falling notes, and to realise the exquisite curving line of its invisible pathway through the air. Amongst the smaller birds, the Corn Bunting has, perhaps, the most indifferent wing-power. The Rook and the Crow are awkward risers, and appear to have difficulty in dealing with their legs. They never seem to have mastered the art of alighting gracefully, and usually complete their descent with an awkward jerk.—"Yorkshire Post."

Didn't "Hanker" After Crow.

A correspondent sends us another version of the Crow story published in our issue of May 29. It is taken from a letter from "Senex" to "Country Life," referring particularly to Pigeons as Food. The writer says:—"Pigeon pie suppers were at one time common, and the landladies of most village inns were willing to prepare pigeon pie suppers for their regular customers, for the sake of the ale which was certain to be called for in extra quantity, and the more strong ale used to wash the 'john-pies' down, the more easily would the 'john-pies' suit the stomach. I remember a case in which at one pigeon pie supper one of the party challenged the rest to eat a roasted Crow. It was accepted by one, and the company assembled the next night to see the Crow eaten, which it was in due course. As the last morsel was washed down, the eater said: 'Yis; Ah con ett Crow, but Aw'm danged if Ah hanker for it!' The Crow had been dosed while cooking with a very liberal dose of red pepper and Top Mill snuff. It was a joke which amused three villages for months."

FEATHERED HUNS MAKE A RAID.

Do Crows Spike Birds' Eggs?

I have rarely heard a bird so vociferous as on Thursday afternoon, says the contributor of "Nature Notes" to the "Birmingham Daily Mail" of May 29, when a Missel Thrush in a small oak tree attracted my attention while some distance away by its loud and long repeated scolding and cries of indignation. The cause of the disturbance was quickly realised when I observed a couple of Carrion Crows flying about the tree as if engaged in some sort of a concerted attack. On approaching closer I noticed there were three Crows, which is unusual, as these birds generally make their egg-stealing raids in pairs. Then I saw the nest itself in a fork of a tree, and the female making a desperate effort to defend it against overwhelming odds without even the aid of her mate. The bird fought bravely, scolding loudly all the time, but her efforts were unavailing, for while two of the Crows were menacing her from opposite sides, the third came up from behind, and I saw it fly off with an egg at the end of its beak and the other two Crows set off in pursuit.

The belief, which is firmly held by country folk, that Carrion Crows impale eggs on the point of the bill has often been discredited by ornithologists, but in the present instance I feel compelled to confirm it. I got a good view of the bird and the egg with my field-glasses, and the whole form of the egg was visible; in fact, it looked so large that if I had not seen the Crow come from the nest with it I should have thought it was too large for a Missel Thrush's. Thrushes seem to suffer from these attacks more than any other birds, both eggs and young being frequently taken. This, however, is the first time I have ever seen three Crows engaged in the act.

THE CRESTED CANARY AND ITS BREEDING.

By G. M. DAVEY (Plymouth).

(Concluded from p. 307)

THE head should be large and broad, and the entrance wide, the feather rising suddenly from the very start of its growth, owing to its denseness at the base of the beak. This feathering should gradually expand in width as it gracefully falls over the skull to the back of the head, its density causing it to fall over the eyes at the sides, giving the bird a frowning appearance, which fanciers call lashing. This feather, falling over the sides of the head, gives a peculiarly wide appearance to the skull, finishing off with a good expanse at the back of the head. The bird should have a very short, neat beak, for this greatly adds to the beauty of the massively shaped skull.

Standard Points of the Crest Bred.

Here is the exact standard: The Crest-bred should have a body of Bullfinch type; the head should be large and round, and broad at every part; small beak, and abundance of long, broad feather, commencing at entrance of beak, continuing over the crown, and flowing well down the poll; and must be well browed. In a good bird the feather on the crown when turned over should reach to the end of the beak, or farther; the brows should give the bird a sulky appearance without any brushing (artificial aid) whatever.

The first rule to be observed in pairing birds for Crest breeding is to mate a Crest with a Crest-bred—that is, a bird bred from a Crest and a Plainhead. Pick the best Crest hen you have, and pair your best Crest-bred cock with her; by so doing you should get good results. The reason for pairing the Crest and Crest-bred is somewhat obvious, if we bear in mind that a Canary's crest is not a high spherical tuft, but a flat fimbriated arrangement of feathers on the top of the skull, which, radiating from a centre, would have their character entirely altered if any approach to a high tuft were to be produced. I have on more than one occasion seen such tufted form, and a crest without any centre is not so uncommon an occurrence as to excite surprise.

"Tuft-Crests," if I may so call them, seem to present no methodical arrangement of the feathers, and are very different in character from a radiated crest. They are more like rough mats than anything else, and the repeated pairing of two Crests would lead to this form of head-feather without any of the radiation which is so dear to the fancier's eye. Therefore we use the Crest-bred to retain radiation and droop.

Of course, this does not always follow as an immediate result; and the rule of pairing Crest to Crest-bred is at times departed from when it is found desirable to obtain excess of crest feather at the risk of sacrifice of form and radiation. The result of a first double cross greatly depends on the proper radiation and droop of the two Crests paired. Some of the best birds that have ever appeared on the show bench have been bred from two Crests, but ofttimes what is gained in feather is lost in symmetry, which has to be afterwards developed by mating Crest-breds with such Crests.

Consequences of Double Cresting.

As a result of such a mating of two Crested Canaries, besides some good Crests of approved type there will be some very objectionable forms which are not at all desirable of perpetuation. For instance, ugly partings on either side of the crest, called "splits," or "gutters," may occur, and these destroy radiation, this is by no means an uncommon defect; or a split in front, in which there is an absence of any centre, and it looks as if the crest has been parted with a comb, and this form of split is extremely difficult to breed out. The centres of some of the best crests have an inclination this way, only in a modified form, which does not interfere with the proper arrangement of the frontal crest; nevertheless, it has a tendency that way. These are called "running centres" and when pairing such birds a breeder requires to be very careful.

Again, there is the "broken" or "tucked-inside"; birds with this fault are described by most Crest breeders as having weak or short sides. Now we come to the Crest with the rough back which we very often see, and to pair such a bird with a Crest-bred which is rough or horned at the sides of the head, will further intensify the fault, while its pairing with a Crest bred having perfectly smooth feathers at the back will reduce the fault. Such pairing has also the tendency to reduce the size of the scar like patch on the back of the head of the Crest, and the smaller this is the smoother the Crest will be.

I have heard many say that the produce of two Crests will be more or less bald on the head, but I can positively say I have never had such a thing happen, nor have I seen such a specimen. I have bred birds apparently Crest-breds from two Crests, a thing easily accounted for, as the Crest has much of the Crest-bred in it, and I have seen more or less disturbance of the usual type, but never anything approaching baldness; it has always been the reverse. I therefore unhesitatingly say that to pair two Crests is a certain way to obtain a density of feather which can afterwards be regulated and brought into shape by pairing back to Crest-breds with nice, smooth feather over the head. One thing I will say, and that is if double-cresting is repeated to any extent there is a tendency to produce running ulcers at the back of the head or over the nostrils. This defect disappears from the offspring if such a bird be paired to a Crest-bred.

Why Not Colour and Markings?

What is wanted is crest, just as we must elsewhere have markings, and we must furnish this at all hazards; once obtained, it will rest with the breeder to restore and maintain a balance of other properties by the exercise of skill in his art. Owing to lack of attention by breeders the majority of our stock now are simply heavily variegated birds. When breeders succeeded in obtaining the large modern Crest they should have paid more attention to colour and markings; but even now it is not too late to mend.

Yellow blood should be used about every fourth season, double-buffing the three intermediate seasons. If yellow blood were used in this manner great benefits would ensue, without any loss in density of feather. Breeding from a buff bred from a yellow and buff, paired to a bird bred from double buffs, has most beneficial effects.

The Happy Go Lucky Method.

And now I must caution the beginner against thinking that all he has to do is to go to some show, buy a couple of first prize winners, and at once commence to breed Crests of merit equal, or anything like equal, to those he has purchased. Suitable partners must be selected, and this is where many novices come to grief; they think if they pair two first prize birds together success is bound to follow, and they are bitterly disappointed when it does not. They forget that possibly those first prize birds may not have been absolutely perfect in every point, and may both possess the same fault at one or more points. To pair birds together just because they happen to be first prize winners is only happy-go-lucky mating, for each should have a counter-balancing excellence against any fault in its partner.

Though everyone who can afford it wisely purchases the best stock he can find, my advice would be not always to buy show specimens, unless for show purposes, but rather to invest in real good stock birds; or, if you have already a stock of birds which need improvement, invest in such as show extreme development of the one point desired in your stock, for when a cultivated idea reaches its zenith it must be maintained or it will surely decline.

The Breeding of the Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrid.

Established Beyond Doubt This Time.

AS promised in my letter in CAGE BIRDS of May 29, I will now try to give an account of my experience with my birds, and especially with the breeding and rearing of the Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids.

It is now about nine years since I began keeping cage birds, and while I am by no means an authority, perhaps my experience may encourage others in the Fancy. I have been fairly successful in my attempts, though I have never done much at showing, unless at our club shows, where I have been able to secure some points at times.

First Love; Common Canaries.

My first attempt was with two pairs of common Canaries, from which I had three or four young. This was not much, yet even such a small success encouraged me, and gradually my aspirations grew. I then tried a few prize-bred Borders with fairly good results, but later Norwich Canaries claimed my attention and favour. I have to thank my friend Mr. Jas. Brown for introducing me to Norwich, which were his favourites, too, in the old days, when he did a good bit of winning in many parts of Scotland. At present I have about a dozen hens breeding, and my first young ones are just getting on the sticks.

About seven years ago I got built a good-sized garden aviary, of which I will try and send you a photograph later. In this I have gradually got together a nice collection of Britishers, with a few hardy foreigners to give colour and variety. Some people say they will not do together, but I have never had any trouble with them so far.

And Very Nice, Too.

My aviary is composed of three sections. The first is quite enclosed, and in it my Norwich Canaries are kept in box cages which can be made into long flight cages by drawing the movable partitions. This part is 11ft. by 9ft. The second section is enclosed on three sides and roof, with a net wire front, and measures 11ft. by 5ft. At one end of this there is a large flight where I can keep Hybrid pairs for breeding, and I find they do well. This flight will be about 5ft. by 4ft., by 5ft. high. The third section is quite open, except a little bit of roof covering about 5ft. or so, and this open flight, in which I have a lot of dead trees and shrubs (because the birds won't let live ones grow), is 11ft. by 15ft.

It is in the latter section that I keep most of my Britishers, including the Thrush and Blackbird which have bred and reared the Hybrids this year. In this there is a Thrush that has moulted seven times, and he is as fresh to-day, and singing, as a young one. Last summer I got another young Thrush which I took to be a hen and showed as such at our club shows. However, as the season advanced and the spring weather came on this young bird began to sing. This was quite a disappointment to me, for I thought I had got a mate for the old one, and expected to breed some young from them; I had no thought that there were better than young Song Thrushes to come.

A Glad Surprise.

About the middle of April the Blackbird hen, which has been in the aviary for three years, began to build her nest in her usual way, laid three eggs and began to sit. Not expecting anything but the usual empty eggs, I merely took note of the date on my register, and paid little more attention, and so you may understand my surprise and pleasure to find two newly-hatched chicks in the nest on the morning of the fourteenth day after. I soon procured a lot of small earthworms which I put in a pan with some soil in it, and was rewarded by seeing the mother bird get down almost at once and begin feeding the young.

This was on May 3, and from then until now, June 1, it has been a constant hunt for earthworms and slugs to keep these hungry youngsters going. On May 16 they left the nest, and the same day the Blackbird began making up the nest again. In two days she had it plastered and lined, and laid her first egg again on the 20th.

At It Again.

This time she has laid four eggs, and if fertile they should hatch out by the end of this week I think. On May 20 the young were showing an attempt to pick at food, and on the 22nd could kill and swallow small earthworms. The hen still kept feeding them, and even up till May 31 I saw her feeding. She has been a very busy bird.

Regarding feeding the young, the mother bird has done that entirely herself. We always kept a supply of worms and slugs in the pan, and it was no easy task during such dry weather; then we had soft bread always handy, and, lastly, oatmeal made into a paste with water, sometimes mixing a little finely chopped raw meat with it. This was all she got except whatever she could pick up in the aviary herself. I noticed she was very fond of the oatmeal paste to feed them with after they were on a bit.

I trust this may encourage others to try for this or other rare crosses, for we never know when success may come our way.

I find Hybrid breeding very interesting, and, though attended by many disappointments, I have found it very encouraging. In the last three years I have been able to breed the following: two Linnet Bullies, two Redpoll Goldfinches, two Linnet Greenies, and one Redpoll Greenie, all of which except the Redpoll Goldies, were successfully reared.

In closing I should like to thank the Editor of CAGE BIRDS for his kind letters of encouragement, and wish CAGE BIRDS the success it so well deserves.

LIGHT MULING CANARIES.

A Paper read by Mr. J. Maddison at the Newcastle C.B.S. Meeting, June 3rd.

HAVING been asked to say something to you on the subject of Mule or Hybrid breeding, I propose to give my views, and a bit of my experience, on the breeding of Canaries for the purpose of Light Mule-breeding, which I consider is the most interesting, because it is the most puzzling, branch of the whole Cage Bird Fancy. Puzzling, because some of the best Light Mules ever staged have been bred from hen Canaries which had not been sib-bred. Puzzling, because no one has yet been able satisfactorily to explain what it is that causes those hens to breed Light Mules, whilst some hen Canaries which have been bred from birds closely sib-bred for many generations will breed nothing but dark Mules. This latter fact, to my mind, goes to prove that sib-breeding is useless unless the birds you use will breed a fairly light Mule; you would then have some foundation to build upon.

The Quickest Way.

If any of you wish to go in for Light Mule breeding, your quickest way would be to get a hen Canary that has bred a light Mule. Having secured such a hen, the next thing required is a suitable mate for her. Although hen Canaries from recognised light Muling strains are seldom offered for sale, cocks from those strains can usually be bought at a reasonable price, and it is one of those cocks that is wanted for pairing to the hen that has bred the light Mule.

The young hens from this pair should be paired to Finches the following year; any that breed light Mules should be paired to their father, and also pair one of the young cocks to its mother. After that, it is simply a matter of selection, in using the biggest cocks and only breeding from those hens that breed light Mules. The hens which breed nothing but dark Mules should not be used for Canary breeding, or you will be perpetuating a fault which you should do your utmost to breed out; it is only by such weeding out that you can expect to improve your stock. I would even go further, and say when you have sufficient material to select from breed Canaries only from the hens that breed the lightest Mules. The tendency of the Mules to come lighter ought to be encouraged if you want to gain ground.

Where Sib-Breeding Helps.

It is at this point that the benefit of sib-breeding comes in. Such a process helps to fix the tendency to breed light Mules. To inbreed with birds that breed only dark Mules would only help to fix the tendency to breed dark Mules.

Of course it is not absolutely necessary to have a hen that will breed a light Mule to begin with. If unable to get such a hen, the next best thing is to get hens which you know have been clear bred for a few generations, and pair them to a cock bred from a reliable light Muling strain. Keep all the young hens, and pair them to Finches the following season. Some of them are almost sure to breed light Mules, and any that do so ought to be paired to their father, and the young hens tested with Finches the following season; those that breed the lightest Mules should be paired to their father; you then get young which are practically the same blood as their father. Of course where there is material to choose from, nothing but the biggest and most vigorous birds should be used for inbreeding. Small weedy hens, and hens that fail to breed light Mules, should not be used for Canary breeding so long as you have anything better for the purpose.

The Value of the Cock Bird.

From the foregoing you may see that I have great faith in the cock Canary for establishing a light Muling strain, and I have good reasons for doing so, because I have known of more than one instance where a sib-bred cock Canary has been the means of building up a good stock of light Mules.

I will tell you of one such instance which happened in this city some fifteen or more years ago. An old acquaintance of mine was very keen on breeding Mules; he was very successful in breeding numbers of Mules but could not breed a light feather. Being in the habit of taking his Mules to the bird market to sell, he one day got into conversation with a fancier who had bred several good light Mules and who, after listening to the old man's lament about not being able to breed anything but dark Mules, very generously promised that when the next breeding season came round he would fix him up with a cock Canary to pair with his hens. He kept his promise, and four hens were bred from the borrowed cock and a hen that had repeatedly bred nothing but dark Mules.

Correspondence.

Temporary Retirement of a Well-known Judge.

Sir,—It is with great regret that I have to ask you to announce through your valuable columns that owing to pressure of work I am compelled to resign all my judging engagements for the forthcoming season. I am taking over an important position on urgent Admiralty work, and I have been asked to give the whole of my time to seeing that this work is carried out. I have already been engaged to judge nine or ten shows next season, and I am writing to the respective secretaries asking them to accept my resignation and appoint another judge in my place. I might add that I have been rather unfortunate with my stock so far this season, not having the time to look after them properly, but I still hope to be able to put down a good young bird or two next season, as I have no intention of giving up my hobby, which I have been connected with for over seventeen years. W. Reid

Siamese Twin Canaries.

Sir,—I have been breeding Canaries as an amateur for three years, and I have now a bird which has nested twice this year. The first nest of three eggs all came off, and of the second nest of four eggs three birds came off. After two days I opened the remaining egg and found two birds inside; both birds were well formed, but one had no legs, the fully formed bird being joined by the head to the place where the legs of the other should have been. Will you kindly let me know if this is a common thing among Canaries? S. Abell.

[It is not a very uncommon occurrence for two birds to be formed within one egg, and such eggs occasionally hatch out. Less frequently, double yolked eggs will produce abnormalities, such as birds with two heads, or with extra feet or other limbs, and at rare intervals the double yolk results, as in the present case, in two more or less perfectly formed birds joined together.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

When Judges Disagree.

The Case of "White Rose."

Sir,—I had not intended to write again or take any further notice of Mr. Saywell's letters, but he accuses me of writing deliberate untruths. I thank him very much; he is a gentleman. He has evidently sat on that rock waiting for it to fly, until he has lost his memory. Read your own letters again, Mr. J. W. S., evidently you have forgotten since your proof-reader or secretary went through them, what they contain. I can therefore excuse you not remembering what you said twenty months ago. Practise what you preach, Mr. Saywell. How many writers have pointed out errors or mis-statements in your letters? Even Mr. Parlett has pulled you up on two occasions. It is unnecessary for me to defend myself, fanciers will understand that. As I am working on a Government contract for war materials I am unable to attend the meeting. Even if I had the time I have no particular desire to discuss this matter further with a person who talks in a more ungentlemanly manner than he writes. I thank the gentleman who made the appointment for me to attend the meeting re discussion; I had no knowledge of it until I saw it in the Club Notices column.

Hyson Green.

Sir,—There were five of us (including the owner of the "one and only"), and we met at a bird show not a thousand miles from Bradford. The conversation veered round to "White Rose." Some of the five expressed their firm conviction that it is not a Canary-Bullfinch, and gave their reasons for forming that opinion. The owner then declared that the cause of "White Rose" having more size and substance than any other Canary-Bullfinch was because it was bred from a Crestbred cock Canary. And now in Cage Birds of June 5, 1915, the owner tells us that "White Rose" was bred from a grand Norwich Canary, which came from a very prominent exhibitor of Norwich. It has always been admitted that the alleged father of "White Rose" was a buff Canary. Yet the owner, in his letter of June 5th, points out that the yellow bars on the wings and tail of "White Rose" come from the Canary. Such preposterous statements are not very flattering to the intelligence of your readers. Yellow bars on a buff Canary's wing; what next! Why they cannot even be found on a yellow Canary. He might as well tell us that the yellow bars on his Greenfinch Mule's wings came from the Canary; or that the yellow bar on the wings and tail of "White Rose" came from the black feathers of the Bullfinch. No, no; yellow cannot be produced by mixing black and buff

One of the Five.

Singing Finch-Canary Hybrids.

Sir,—It may interest you to know that I paired an African Grey Singing Finch cock with a Sib.-bred, Norwich type, hen Canary, and got four eggs, one of which was broken after they had been set two days, and one was unfertile. The remaining two, however, hatched out all right, and I have now two fine birds which will be three weeks old on June 11. Do you know of anyone who has reared this cross before? I have been told that no one has been successful before; I know of at least half a dozen fanciers who have tried.

H. Kay.

[Hybrids between Singing Finches, both Green and Grey, and Canaries have been successfully bred and reared, though neither of the crosses is a common one.—Ed. Cage Birds.]

Song Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids.

Confirmation by the President of the Darvel C.B.S.

Sir,—Mr. Anderson, one of our local bird-fanciers, has in his aviary two fine Song Thrush x Blackbird Hybrids which he has successfully reared. Both birds are in good condition, and show distinct trace of their parentage. The larger of the two is more of the Blackbird type, being dark brown on upper parts, but showing a beautiful speckled breast and flanks. The smaller one is more like its father, having the well-known speckled breast, but rather duller in colouration on the upper parts than a young Song Thrush. In fact, if it were flying about in the open, it would pass as a young Mavis, even to a close observer. Mr. Anderson has informed me that the Blackbird has again sat on four eggs. May his further endeavour give him further success.

A Plea for Extra Selling Classes.

Sir,—Now that committees of bird societies are considering the schedules and classes for the forthcoming show season, I would like to emphasise the importance of putting on their schedule selling classes for Yorkshire and Norwich, flighted and unflighted, both cocks and hens, especially for open shows. There are hundreds like myself who have not the time nor sufficient acquaintance with numerous high-class breeders to visit their rooms individually and buy suitable birds. But, given the facility to buy good birds at open shows, we could make a point of attending and picking up a few. For instance, a good prize offered for most points in a selling class for cocks should bring out some good birds, and the same with hens. Being interested in Yorkshires, I specially commend this suggestion to Yorkshire societies; at all events, I intend to visit the shows that have the selling classes on their schedules, with a view to purchase good birds.

Yorkshire Clear.

Blue Tits in a Quarry.

Sir,—I have been greatly interested in reading the letters from the front relating to bird life, and no doubt your readers will be interested in a curious nesting place of a pair of blue tits. In the quarries of the Devon Balsalt Granite Co., at Trusham, Devon, where I am employed, there is a large crane which is on top of the rock about 20 feet high, and which pulls up the skips containing about 30 cwt. of stone. In this rock, just below the crane, a pair of Tits have built their nest in a hole, and have a clutch of young, although the skip is constantly bumping against the rock, when travelling up and down with stone for the breakers. The birds seem to watch the skips to see if all is clear for them to go in and out with food, which is nearly every minute. Below the nest, about 18 or 19 feet, large rocks are blasted out, and the blasting causes loud reports and great concussion. I cannot understand how the eggs could have been successfully hatched with the vibration of blasting; there are air drills working all day, and about 40 men employed, which causes a lot of noise. Other birds are breeding in bushes around the quarries and do not take any notice of the blasting which is carried out several times a day.

The Norwich Plainhead and How to Improve it.

Sir,—As an interested reader of Cage Birds, and especially of the correspondence on how to improve the Norwich Plainhead, I, like the writer of the letter in this week's number who signs himself "Observer," think it a pity that there should be so much of a bad spirit shown towards Mr. Allsopp, whose articles I fully enjoy as being very original, racy, and instructive. I may say I do not agree with all that Mr. Allsopp says, but all the same I hope to have the pleasure of reading more of his writings, and here let me ask others to stick to the improving of the Norwich Plainhead for the benefit of, I was going to say the novice, but I shall rather say the working-man fancier, who, having a love for the breed, has a sore struggle to keep in the Fancy. When I say working-man fancier I do not mean one who is earning about a fiver a week, but those who are earning a third of that sum. These are the men who would feel the benefit of some good practical advice which would not only improve their stud, but also their income. So come away, you stalwarts; stop mud-slinging, and instead of backing a fiver back up the backbone of the Fancy, the lowly working-man fancier. If this note should be the means of bringing out a bit of what our brother fanciers have up their sleeve I shall be well paid for the time spent. I hope to write you a little of my own experiences at some time soon.

T. R. Wallace.

Sir,—In answer to Mr. Allsopp I may say I have read Mr. Brown's letter, but it would take time digesting. He says he does not consider it necessary to get large heads, better feather, increased colour, etc. His ambition is not great; mine always has been. In all hobbies I have taken up I improve upon existing varieties, and I have the reputation of doing it. Then he goes on to ask if the Crests and Cinnamons were always such big, bonny birds. Have these not been produced by crossing? I have bred and exhibited some of the best that ever graced the show bench of both varieties in their day, probably the best Cinnamons of all times, and I can tell your readers they were manufactured by direct crosses, introduced by your humble. If Mr. Brown or any other reader would like details I will give them. I think before one writes to this journal he should know something about the subject he is tackling; Mr. Brown does not appear to know much about improving the Norwich by crossing, or he would not talk of taking a lifetime to produce winning specimens. Now, Mr. Allsopp, I do not say the Crest is the only cross to ensure the correct head; I know good heads have been bred from the Cinnamon cross. But how were those good heads got? There's the rub; no Crest-bred in these. I hope you will be successful in finding a pure Norwich. What is it?

A Protection Association Proposed.

Sir,—Might I call the attention of British fanciers to the fact that a "Fanciers' Protection Association" is in the course of formation in Glasgow? The object of the Association will be to tackle the question of fraudulent dealers and others who impose on genuine bird fanciers. It is intended to counteract the operations of those who send dead or dying birds to purchasers at a distance, also dealers and others making false declaration as to sex, etc., of birds. The association, on satisfying itself that a deliberate and intentional wrong has been committed, will have the name of the individual or firm posted up in every bird club in Great Britain, and members will be asked to circulate the information amongst members not in attendance at the meetings. A nominal fee of one shilling per year will be charged for membership, and the various offices will be discharged voluntarily. In cases where an alleged offence has been committed, but where conclusive evidence of guilt is not established to the satisfaction of the Association, Cage Birds (provided you consent to act) will, after having been furnished with all the available information, be asked to decide. Members who are found guilty of any of the offences enumerated will be struck off the roll of membership of the Association.

The rules are not quite complete, but we shall be glad to hear from those interested, and thank you in anticipation for publication of this in your esteemed paper.

P. W. Lavin.

173, Thomson St., Dennistoun, Glasgow.

[We are publishing the above letter as received, although, in our opinion, our deposit system is quite an efficient safeguard against fraudulent practices, for no money is handed over by us to the seller until we receive notification from the buyer that he is satisfied with his purchase. It would not be possible for Cage Birds to take any active part in the proposed Association.—Editor "C.B."]

Eleven Eggs in a Clutch.

Sir,—In answer to D. Rowley, re eleven eggs in a clutch, I have had an unflighted Yorkshire hen lay eleven eggs in a clutch. I sat her when she had laid her third egg, and removed the cock, and I thought all was going on all right until one morning I went into the room and found blood all over the cage, and I was surprised to find a nest full of eleven eggs instead of the usual clutch of four or five. I am sorry to say I had to destroy her.

W. H. Buttle.

Rooks or Crows?

Sir,—The distinction between a Rook and a Crow seems to be a puzzle to many, and no matter how many times it is pointed out there seem always to be many who are thirsting for the information. For lucidity of explanation the answer given to an enquirer who has written to a North-county paper will take some beating. The contributor who vouchsafes the information made himself safe, according to his answer, by consulting three works of reference, and his researches have resulted in the settlement of the question for ever (?) He says:

"Crow, according to the generally accepted authorities, is the generic name of a number of birds. "Lloyd's Encyclopædia" gives this definition of it: 'Any one of various other birds belonging to the family Corvidæ.' The same work defines the Rook as the common Crow. 'Chambers's Encyclopædia' gives, under the head of 'Rook,' the explanation, 'A species of Crow'; and the 'Encyclopædia Britannica,' 'The commonest and best known of the Crow tribe.' Thus 'Crow' is the generic name—Rook, Carrion, Hooded, or Dun, as the case may be, the specific."

All the same, there will still be many of his readers who do not know the difference between a Rook and a Crow.

Corvidæ?

Birds in the Firing Line.

Sir,—Noting the several interesting letters from our soldiers at the Front which have been published in Cage Birds, I have thought your readers would like to know of a letter written by a soldier to his mother, and sent by the latter to "The Spectator." It is as follows:—

"I saw a Flycatcher here this afternoon, pretty little chap. . . . I have only seen one Bullfinch but heard several. This place is full of Nightingales. I have got one nest within four or five yards, but it is in a blackthorn thicket. My searches have so far disclosed a Magpie's nest with nine eggs. One I tried to blow, but it was too far advanced and smashed, so I have hopes of a tame one in about ten days' time. I have found heaps of Blackbirds' and Thrushes' nests. One lovely little nest roofed in blue feathers but not yet working. I think a Tit's of some kind. I saw Swallows here last Monday. Thursday afternoon I saw two Cuckoos for the first time this year; also a pair of Ravens. I think they are not nesting here but farther afield. Would you look up 'Morris' for any likely spots for Yellowhammers' nests? I have tramped through lots of gorse and crawled in banks and can't find one at all. I was surprised the other day sitting in my room reading to hear a noise like a cat having its tail trodden on. I got my glasses (guessing it was a bird) and hunted the tree-tops outside the window carefully and finally spotted a big bird nearly the size of a Jackdaw, certainly as big as a Jay, almost completely yellow, with long beak and some black on the wings and tail. I have heard it since, but not seen it, and must put it down as a Yellow Oriole. The bird was right on top of a tall beech tree and remained about three minutes, and flew off. I revisited the small closed-in nest made of moss I found ten days ago in a furze patch, and it is now feather-lined and contains eight eggs, white, with at the large end rust red spots fairly sprinkled and but a few towards the other end. It may be a Tit of some kind; not a long-tailed Tit, as there is no lichen on the nest."

NEW CROSS C.B.S.

First young stock show "Salisbury," Lewisham, June 3. Entries were lower than in previous years, but considering the times this is not to be wondered at. Although Mr. J. Fuller, who is in France, managed to have a team out, the loss of entries was greatly felt from such keen exhibitors as Sergt. Joplin, C. Preece, P. Cooper, C. Young, and F. W. Burton, who are all with the Forces. An entry of 30 must therefore be considered very satisfactory, and quality throughout was very good. Special best in show went to Mr. W. H. Gardner's winning Nor., closely followed by Mr. A. J. Clarke's Yorks., and Mr. H. C. Humphries' Buff Bord., a real "wee gem," bred, we hear, from the L.C.B.A. diploma winner. Mr. R. A. Newley judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction.

Club Reports.

BORDER CITY (Carlisle) O.S.

Meeting, Headquarters, June 2, before a good attendance. Correspondence from CAGE BIRDS and O.N.P.C. was read. Subs. for cups handed in; first young bird show discussed. Proposed that this be held June 30, at 7, seven classes: Border cl. or tkd. yell., buff, variег., gr. or cinn., Nor. cl. or tkd. yell., buff, variег. J. C. Bell

CLAPHAM C.B.A.

Meeting, June 1. A vote of thanks was accorded Sec. for having made arrangements for the annual outing, and it was regretted that he had been too unwell to be present at the outing. Mr. Morris was nominated for membership. Schedule for the young bird show arranged. It is practically the same as last year, but we are adding a cup for Dove.—A. R. Cox.

RICHMOND (Surrey) C.B.S.

Meeting, St. John's Hall, May 31, Mr. W. H. Phipps, chair and only a small attendance due to the breeding season being in full swing. Decided not to purchase any closed ring this season. Proposed and seconded that there shall be three competitors, and not less than six entries for points to count for cups, and an amendment was moved to the effect that there be two competitors and six entries. The amendment was lost, but we pointed out that new rule could only be made at a general or special general meeting called for that purpose, and he was instructed to call a special general meeting for June to bring the matter to a final decision. Arranged to hold show early in July, 1st or 2nd Monday or Wednesday. New members made, Messrs. M. Crawley and C. E. Potter. Vote of thanks to chair brought the meeting to a close. Will members please take notice of the "Club and Society Notices" column in CAGE BIRDS, as after the next meeting no post cards will be sent.—G. R. Birch (Hon. Sec.)

ABERSYCHAN C.B.S.

June meeting, Queen's Hotel, Mr. Parry presiding. Resolved to have a radius of 20 miles for the N.F. Show, and to advertise same in "Cage Birds." Two new members elected, Mr. Simons and Mr. Johnson. Mr. Sweeting, the late Sec., produced all books, and these were received with thanks by the meeting.—W. T. Couch, Sec.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

Meeting, with a fair turn-out. After routine business, Sec. was instructed to write for various club patronages. Agreed that Mr. H. W. Battye judge Nor. and Yorks. Members are complaining bitterly of ill-success in the first round, the eggs not hatching owing to the cold weather.—Geo. Havver, Hon. Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting June 5. Mr. R. Rowell was elected to judge N.F. show July 3. Judges for annual show left over to next meeting. Six new members nominated. Our treasurer and secretary have joined the colours, and we all wish them soon back. The books were handed over to the chairman, Mr. J. Stanger; those wishing to be members can join at any time, let them send a card to James Stanger, 59, Grange Terrace, Pelton Fell, Co. Durham.

LEICESTER (Hand-in-Hand) C.B.S.

Meeting, June 1, Mr. Gibbins presided over a large attendance. Members expressed regret to hear of the deaths of Mr. J. B. Stone, and Mr. H. Colver; a great loss to the society and to the Fancy. Decided to hold N.F. Show June 26, with a small charge for admission; proceeds to be placed to the new trophy fund. Prizes won at the recent shows were handed to winners, and the rest of the evening was occupied in "Questions and Answers," a good discussion followed. The usual vote of thanks closed the meeting.—A. Freestone.

ANNFIELD PLAIN C.B.S.

Meeting June 5, Mr. Hutchinson chair, and a good turn up of new members. Schedule for young bird show arranged, and Mr. J. Calvert appointed judge. 2 Nor., 2 Yorks, 3 Bord., Goldf. and Bullf., Greenf., Linnet, F. or H.M., Mule or Hyb., Redpoll, Siskin, or Twite, British A.O.V. Decided to have another cup for this year, as R. Peart has won the other outright. We intend changing our meeting night to see if we can get a few more to attend. Please don't forget next meeting June 19.—W. Thompson

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting June 1, Headquarters, Mr. W. G. Fellows, chair. Mr. Downes was elected a member. A number of members regretted that war work would prevent their attendance at the ramble on June 9, but sufficient promises are to hand to ensure a successful outing. A number of special prizes were offered for the F.F. show in July, and the members present took a supply of tickets to sell for same. The hon. sec. would like to hear from any member who is anxious to give a special, or would help by disposing of a few tickets.—G. J. Slade, Hon. Assist. Sec.

LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Meeting June 5, Lockhart's, Mr. Walton chair, with a very good attendance for the time of the year. Members are doing very well with their breeding. We have already sold 700 rings and results up to date of birds on the sticks are: Kranner 20, Walton 20, Atkinson 12, Boyd 6, Hallam 14, Bew 22, Heron 16, Knapton 25, Bennett 10, Raine 6, Roberts 15, Heaton 13, Barnett 40 (it will be noted this member is having a very good season), Taylor 35, Spence 10, Condliffe 20, Thwaites 25, and Best 40: so given a bit of reasonable luck members should give a good account of themselves at the coming shows.—H. Best, Sec.

EASTLEIGH C.B.S.

Meeting May 31, Boy Scouts Room, a good number turned up and some very interesting items were gone into. N.F. show fixed for July 14. Periodical rambles were discussed and voted unanimously. The first to take place June 13, weather permitting; friends are invited to join. Mr. E. Cook has promised to lead the way, being well acquainted with the surrounding country, so we are sure to have an enjoyable time. Meet outside of Eastleigh station 9.15 a.m. sharp. Ramble will occupy about four hours through an excellent piece of country thickly populated by our feathered friends. Second ramble July 1.—J. Alderslade, Sec.

BARROW C.B.S.

Meeting June 2, Gardner's Restaurant, Mr. A. Hudson presiding, and a poor turn out present. Decided to run the N.F. Show on July 10 in aid of the Mayor's Tobacco Fund for the local Territorials at the Front who are fighting for the maintenance of our safety and civilisation. It is to be hoped our members will rally round and make the show a gigantic success, and thus add to the comfort of our lads. The show will be opened by J. Fisher, Esq., at 2 o'clock. At our next meeting, June 16, all the printing will be in order, so let us have a bumping turn out, and get the tickets on sale, and thus relieve the anxiety of the committee.—D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec.

LANCASHIRE & LIZARD F.A.

Meeting, Volunteer Inn, Oldham, May 15, only a moderate attendance. Sec. was unable to attend, and Mr. Joe Hampshire, Oldham, kindly performed the duties. Mr. Bradley was once again amongst us. The question of specials was gone into, all those present receiving theirs, the others being left over until claimed. Decided that Sec. write all last year's societies who gave us Lizard and Lancashire patronage, and try and arrange dates for coming shows. Time and place of next meeting to be left in secretary's hands. Show secretaries desiring the patronage of the Lancashire and Lizard F.A. should write at once to me at 44, Hall Carr Road, Rawtenstall, Lancs., for particulars. Members please try and attend meetings, and especially the next one, as business of importance will be gone into.—John Rukin, Hon. Sec.

ALTRINCHAM OPEN C.B.S.

Meeting June 2, Station Cafe, Mr. Broadhead presiding over a poor attendance. This is to be regretted, as Mr W. Robinson was present to give his postponed lecture on the Norwich Canary. Mr. Robinson gave a very full account of his method in breeding and general management, and a vote of thanks was accorded him at the close.

Decided to postpone the N.F. show to July 17, and time of meeting to be 8.30 instead of 8 during the summer months. Next meeting June 16. 10 minutes' papers on reasons for keeping different varieties of birds, by Messrs. Leah, Foster, Drinkwater, and Illingworth.—O. Bailey, Hon. Sec.

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

Special meeting Kelvedon Hall, May 31, Mr. J. Jeffreys chair, and a good attendance. Decided to postpone the Young Bird Show to last Saturday in July, Mr. Robson judge. Next meeting June 17 when Mr. J. Jeffries will open a discussion on colour feeding.—H. F. Bowring, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, 4th June, Mr. Jones presiding. After hearing a report on the progress of the combined show the papers on birdy matters were read. Eight competed and the winners, selected by voting, were Messrs. Sparkes, Sisson, and Jones. Mr. Harry Sanderson elected a member. Next meeting table show of young birds.—E. Sisson, Assist Sec.

READING C.B.S.

Meeting, June 2 with a good attendance. Sec. reported that Mr. T. Yates had kindly promised to judge F.F. Show, July 7. Members will receive schedules as soon as ready. Mr. Frewin and Sec. gave two different methods of colour food making. Mr. Frewin using egg and biscuit, and the Sec. Spratt's cod liver oil food and no egg. Both were much appreciated by members, the methods were considered as good as each other, so the prize was held over for a future competition. Members are reminded that all points in Canary classes at F.F. Show count towards points cup, so please send as many entries as possible.—O. C. Smith, Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER C.C.

Meeting, June 2, Pillar's Cafe, Pink Lane, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Mr. A. Affleck, chair, before a good turn up. Mr. Coulthard was elected a member. Decided to have N.F. show at next meeting. Judges, Mr. Coulthard (champion), Mr. Montgomery (novice). The remainder of the evening was devoted to questions and answers, the whole of those present taking part. It was evident that members were out to enjoy themselves, as some of these were of a distinctly original and humorous character, and at times the meeting fairly rocked with laughter, especially when Mr. Potts, in replying to a question as to whether hens' eggs were best for soft food, said that "Not having used cocks' eggs he could not recommend them." Several others kept the meeting going with just that swing which is so essential for the building up of good fellowship.—C. Farrer, Hon. Sec.

REDCAR C.B.S.

Members had a very pleasant ramble, June 6, on the Marske Whins, being ably escorted by Messrs. Clarke and Dunn. Arriving at our destination we were soon convinced of the presence of plenty of bird life, by the many songsters all round. Nests were found of many varieties, Thrushes, Blackbirds, Brown and Green Linnets, Chaffinches, Hedge Sparrows, and Redpolls, being fairly numerous, both with eggs and young. We also found or were shown nests of the Yellowhammer, Chiff-Chaff, and "Featherpoke"; also the nest of a Pheasant, with about six eggs within a day of hatching, the young being all dead in the shell. The hillsides were covered with bluebells, and members took advantage of this to take home a good supply. After having a good ramble, thanks to our escort, we plodded off, ready to do justice to a good dinner, after spending a very pleasant and instructive morning.—W. Boagey, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

The ramble on June 6 was a huge success; the atmospheric conditions were ideal, the sun shone brilliantly all day, and a refreshing breeze compensated for the heat. The minster was a good one, including nearly all our officials and many of their friends, even one journeyed from Bradford to join us, which is evidence how attractive the outing was. Starting from the Park Hotel, Hillsbro', we made for Whale's Jaw, via Wadsley Bridge and Penistone Old Road, where we met our guide, Mr. Joe Beever, a most interesting individual with a thorough knowledge of the district. We rested a few minutes to survey the wonderful scenery, and after swallowing a mass of information from "Joe," set off along Birley Edge to Greno Wood. Skirting the plantation to the top corner, we entered a most beautiful coppice, and in spite of the drought, the perfume of the bloom was exquisite. Passing along, our attention was drawn to a path, almost overgrown, along which, 60 years ago, the post-boy, Geo. Coggin, who is still alive, carried the letters to the farm houses on that memorable 9th of May when snow lay 15 inches deep. Meandering on, we left the Norfolk estate, and crossing a small stream we entered the Wharncliffe Wood, in which the foliage was really beautiful, and this was the most charming part of our ramble. Just then a Red start appeared, and I was informed by our guide that these birds were becoming more plentiful. There was abundance of bird life of many species which soon cleared away owing to the babbling of some of our noisy members. At the edge of the wood the advance guard waited for the laggard to arrive, and then we journeyed via Hollow Farm to Penistone Old Road and turned toward Sheffield. We had not gone far, the loiterers now leading in fine style, when we spotted a dray laden with all sorts of liquid refreshments, provided through the usual generosity of our Chairman (Mr. Dawn). We lounged in the wood by the roadside until all had been refreshed in a most acceptable manner, and a few snapshots had been taken, and then passed on through the wood, the large trees covered with foliage keeping out the hot rays of the sun. Suddenly we came upon some ant-hills, and there was a rush among British Birmen for the eggs, and what a harvest they reaped. Soon we emerged from the wood and arrived at the Norfolk Arms, Grenoside, where the ever accepted able Inn and egg tea was provided. A company of 26 sat down and thoroughly enjoyed the feast which was put on in the usual satisfactory style. At 8 p.m. a move was made towards home, all arriving in good time, and the verdict was one of the most enjoyable runs we have had.—E. C. Job, Sec.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

CAUSE OF UNFERTILE EGGS (Harrow, V.B.).—It is not always possible to discover the real cause of unfertile eggs, particularly when the birds, as in your case, appear to be in the best of health and condition. As the hens are now sitting on third clutches, you must have mated them up too early for one thing, and this, with the violent weather changes we have had this spring, may be responsible to a great extent for the lack of fertility. Another probable cause is an overfed condition, which I rather fancy is the most likely one, as it would also explain the condition of the hen which is so often egg bound; or the hens may not have been in quite good condition in spite of appearances, or mating may have taken place in the nest this season, an idiosyncrasy which almost invariably results in this way, or the hens may be past their prime of usefulness as stock birds. On the latter point you give me no clue to give any definite opinion, but some hens lose their powers much earlier than others. I should advise you altogether to discard the hen that is so often egg-bound, and if no results are obtained from the others this round, separate them for this season, give a liberal allowance of green food and seed heads of wild things, and add a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon juice to the drinking water three times a week for a month or six weeks.

YOUNG DYING (E. C. Briggs).—I am afraid you have not made very good use of your study of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," or you would not be giving crushed hemp daily from the time the young are three days old. You might also have seen similar questions to yours answered in this column every week for many weeks past: vide replies to "Reby, 146," and "Outdoor" in last issue, and that to "Trier" in issue of May 29. If you read up these replies and act upon the information therein, and in "Canary Breeding," as it best applies to your own case, stop giving hemp until the young are about ten days old, substitute a little crisp young lettuce or the flowering tips of groundsel for the watercress, sprinkle the egg food with maw seed each time you give a fresh supply, offer the hen a saline bath, and dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the drinking water as soon as you see that she is flagging, I think you will get over your trouble and meet with a greater share of success. You may give a little soaked summer rape in a separate vessel when the young are a week old, but you must be very careful to see that this does not become sour. Give sufficient to last only about two hours at one time.

A RELAPSE (Mrs. J. P.).—It is unfortunate that the bird got so exposed just at the time when it was making such good headway. A relapse was only what might have been expected under such circumstances. The noises in the throat are of sufficient consequence to show that the bird is unfit for breeding, and probably also for any further outdoor life so long as they last. Keep the bird indoors for another month, in a room without fires, with plenty of fresh air, but not in direct draughts (the west room should do nicely if the temperature can be kept down fairly well in the day by open windows). Treat generally as advised in last reply, but try the effect of five drops each every third day of oxymel of squills, specacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia, and sweet spirit of nitre instead of the mixture advised in last reply. Then if the noises have disappeared, and the weather is still settled and warm, you may try it again in the outdoor aviary. It would, however, be a judicious policy to make a point, in any case, of bringing it indoors again in the autumn until next spring.

A BIT PANTIFIED (W. G. Owen).—I do not think this hen is at all a likely subject for breeding successfully. Assuming that she built the nest herself, she has doubtless an interrupted cycle of reproduction, a possibility which could not have been foreseen when you bought her, and the panting, though significant of more or less serious trouble, may not have been discernible until the hen began to sit. Every second day give a morsel of bread and milk on which you have dropped three drops of cod liver oil emulsion and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts millet, niger, teazle, and linseed or chopped sunflower, and every third day add to the drinking water a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea and ten drops of lemon juice. Give a liberal supply of seedy chickweed, flower tips of groundsel, or seed heads of dandelion daily. If this treatment does not result in starting her to nest more naturally in the course of a fortnight or so, go back to an ordinary diet and, if procurable, give the hen a clutch of common eggs to hatch out and rear, which she will probably do quite well, and she may then go to nest on her own account in a normal manner.

CONTINUAL MOULTING (H.).—It certainly looks as if you had not properly removed the exciting causes of the condition, such as the sudden and extreme changes of temperature, which you will get by hanging the bird in a window, or near or over a light which is burning for a few hours in the evenings, or high up near the ceiling, or where it is occasionally exposed to direct cold draughts. Attend to these points, and if the bird is in an overfed condition add to its drinking water every second day for a fortnight as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice, and afterwards treat as follows for a week or two, and note results. Stop the sponge cake, and every third day give instead a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut sprinkled with soft sugar, and on one of the intervening days each time give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give a variety of green seedy things daily—chickweed, shepherd's purse, plantain stalks, and dandelion heads. In the drinking water add every third day a crystal of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea and ten drops of dilute sulphuric acid. If bird is not too fat, give the aperient for two consecutive days only, and then go on with the latter part of the treatment.

GRADUAL DIMINUTION (F. G. T.).—There is nothing in your letter that gives me any clue to the probable cause of the gradual dying off of the young brood. It occurs with some hens that are rather slack and negligent parents, but in these cases one or two of the strongest of the brood should survive, whereas yours died off to the last one. I take it you mix the chopped watercress with the soft food, which is a method I do not care for, though it is not sufficient to account for the loss of the young. When the next broods are hatched, feed for the first four days on equal parts of the soft food you name and yolk of hard-boiled egg. Then gradually add an increasing proportion of stale breadcrumbs until at the end of a week you are using equal parts breadcrumb, egg and the food in question, and slightly sprinkle it with maw seed. For green food give crisp young lettuce, chickweed, or flowering tips of groundsel in preference to watercress, though the latter must be given if the other things are not obtainable. When the young are a week old you may add in a separate vessel a teaspoonful of soaked summer rape daily, but if all this is not consumed in a couple of hours or so remove it, as it will sour in that time in warm weather. At about twelve days old add also a similar quantity of cracked rape daily, but see that this is sweet and sound in the kernel. See "Canary Breeding," which you say you have obtained, for further details, and follow this method with the next broods, and I think you should find things go along to a more successful issue.

DOMESTIC BROILS (E. M. T.).—(1) It is not at all unusual for cocks caged together to be somewhat quarrelsome at this season. If they have a fair amount of "elbow room" no damage is likely to be done, but, still, they would be better caged separately now until it is time to mate them. (2) Of course it is possible to rear the young by hand without the parents' assistance. I have done it myself a number of times, and, as you have found, the trouble is well repaid in the tameness and familiarity of the birds so reared. (3) The silver Lizard which you thought a cock will probably prove a hen, although it is quite possible for a cock in high breeding condition to feed a cock that is out of condition. (4) I do not advise you to mate birds from the same nest. There is practically always considerable loss of size and otamina, and as you have no definite object in doing so, my advice is—don't. (5) About the end of March, if the weather is favourable, is the time to mate up the birds. (6) Yes, when a teaspoonful of mixed seed is prescribed in feeding up birds, it means that quantity for each bird.

NOT SINGING (Roller).—Possibly the bird has seen the best of his days, but try what the following will do for him in the course of a month or so. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed, and in addition give separately every third day half a teaspoonful of scalded summer rape, and on the intervening days give first a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, and teazle, and a morsel of banana, or some green salad, and next a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake or its equivalent in bread and milk, sprinkled with soft sugar. In the water add, every second day for a week, as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece, and ten drops of lemon juice, and in the next week give instead 20 drops of Chemical Food. In the third and fourth weeks repeat the first two weeks' treatment in the same order. Offer it the bath four times a week in mild weather. Its behaviour when you offer it green food, etc., is simply a feature of tameness; it is merely making advances for play, or a sham fight.

BIRDS DYING (Downhearted).—After carefully considering your query, I am rather inclined to think you have a non-virulent type of septic fever among your stock, and would strongly advise you to get a post-mortem on the next that dies, in order to ascertain if this is the case. Otherwise it is doubtless bronchial trouble, but from the particulars you give of your room, it is difficult to see how this comes about, unless there is damp in the room. Give the affected birds half a teaspoonful of scalded summer rape each every second day in addition to the staple diet, and on the alternate days give a piece of bread and milk, the size of a hazel nut, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and slightly sprinkled with soft sugar, and two crisp young dandelion leaves. Twice a week give also a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp niger millet, teazle, and broken groats. In the drinking water add 20 drops of Chemical Food four times a week. Continue this treatment for a month, and if there is not a considerable improvement write again, and I will advise you further.

A TRIO (C. C.).—(1) Yes, it probably would throw the birds into moult to remove them to a cold room now. Your best course is to keep them well away from the fire where the temperature is fairly equable, but away from cold draughts, for a week or two, until we get a spell of nice mild weather somewhere about the middle of March, as will most likely occur, and make the change then. This will prevent them going into moult when moved, unless the circumstances are quite exceptional. To stop the cock dropping casual feathers give, every second day, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. In the water add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel, every third day, until the feathers cease dropping. (2) Every second day for a week give the hen a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and on the alternate days add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to the water. In the following week give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid, every second day. If not then well, write again, and give at least a few particulars, which you now quite omit. (3) Answered in No. 1.

BECOMING BALD (C.P.).—Carefully examine the bird to see if it is troubled with grey lice, and if so take the necessary steps to exterminate this pest. If no insects are present add 20 drops of fluid magnesia to the drinking water every second day for a week. After this give every third day for a month a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur, and then sprinkled with maw seed, and on the day following each time add to the water as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice. If there are any quite bald areas you may slightly anoint the skin over them twice a week with a little sulphur ointment, but do not daub the feathers more than is absolutely unavoidable. Allow the bird to bathe quite freely, and give a variety of green foods, and the half ripe seed heads of wild plants as they come in season. The feathers may not be reproduced until the natural moulting season, but if you consistently follow up the above course of treatment they will probably come all right at that season.

A BALD BORDER (T.B.).—Although the bird appears quite healthy, and has fertilised the eggs well, I doubt the wisdom of breeding with this type of bird. The trouble is certainly in no sense infectious, but there is a certain risk of the young from such birds inheriting a predisposition to the same trouble and of it becoming strongly hereditary. Treat this bird the same as advised to "C.P." in this issue. Treat the buff cock that is just going the same way in the same manner, except that there will be no necessity to anoint the skin if there are no conspicuous bare patches, as one does not want to disfigure a bird considerably until it moults.

COLOUR FEEDING (A.B.).—You omit to say whether you require the birds for exhibition, stock, or sale, or what breed you refer to, and these points materially affect the question. For exhibition, colour feeding, as generally understood, is totally prohibited for the Border Fancy, but to succeed with Norwich, Cinnamons, Lizards, or Yorkshires, though perhaps to a rather less extent with the latter, it is essential; with other breeds it is rather a matter of opinion, though colour probably always tells more or less in turning the scale when other points of merit are finely balanced. If the birds are for sale a little extra colour in all breeds save Borders will invariably add a little to the price which can be obtained for the birds. The colour-feeding of birds required only for stock, or one's own hobby, may be left entirely to each one's particular fancy. Perhaps this will enable you to decide for yourself whether you will "feed" the birds or not. If you decide to do so, you should get the brochure on "Colour Feeding," which our manager would send you for 3½d. post free, and read and digest its pages before the young stock begin to moult, which may be in about a month from now.

SHELLED SEED (John Bull).—The birds, and not mice, are undoubtedly the cause of the shelled seed, of which you send a sample. Sometimes, especially at this season, it is merely the result of mischief, a kind of ennui, but more generally arises from a deranged digestion. Give the birds in the cages where you find this seed a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a fortnight or so, and on the alternating days give, for each bird, half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give a liberal supply of seedy greenstuff—chickweed, mouse-ear, shepherd's purse, plantain stalks, or seed heads of dandelion—daily. In the drinking water every second day for a week add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and after this give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for one or two weeks, as may seem necessary. A cube of hard common salt stuck in the wires for the birds to peck at when they like is often useful in these cases.

STRANGE DEATHS (Bewildered).—I am rather at a loss to name any definite cause of the deaths of so many of your young birds, as there is really very little to find fault with in your general treatment, and the circumstances are peculiar in other ways. Therefore, I think you would be well advised to get a post-mortem on one of the next that die. The sample of hemp, though it contains a rather large percentage of green unripened grains, is of very good quality, so I fail to see how that can be the cause, although you begin to give it earlier than is desirable in ordinary circumstances. Why the young should raise their heads to be fed and yet be unable to open their beaks I cannot quite understand. You should closely examine the beaks to see if there is any gluey secretion or particles of food dried about them which prevents their opening the mandibles, and if that is the case moisten with a drop of warm water, and then touch with a little unsalted butter. The only other likely cause that presents itself to me is constipation, or, possibly, the hens neglecting to keep the nest clean, which may cause caked vents, and in either case give rise to impaction of the bowels. With future broods vary your treatment as follows, and note results. After the first two days add an equal bulk of crushed sponge cake to the egg, and a day or two later add bread crumb, and finish off young with a mixture of equal parts egg, sponge cake, and bread crumb. Give a fair amount of green food from about the fifth day, giving a little, of course, on the two previous days, and give a proportion of crisp young lettuce and the flowering tips of young groundsel instead of all watercress, and do not begin to give hemp until the young are about eight to ten days old, and when you give it only crack it lightly, and not crush it entirely. You may give a little soaked summer rape when the young are about a week old, but be careful that it does not remain long enough to become sour. Offer the bath daily now that the weather is so warm, and if you can do it with safety from prowling vermin and change of air currents allow the window to remain open a little at night. Ventilate quite freely by day.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

HEN NOT LAYING (H).—I cannot see that you can make any alteration in your treatment that will hurry matters on. Hens are frequently some days before they lay even after the nest is built, and one sometimes gets tired of waiting. You might add a little lightly cracked hemp to the seed supply, and increase the wild food, particularly shepherds purse, and seeding chickweed and grasses. It might be advisable to part them for a couple of days, returning the Linnet afterwards during the evening.

FEEDING AN OWL (A.M.).—In a wild state Owls are flesh and insect eaters, feeding upon rats, mice, moles, young rabbits, small birds, beetles, etc., and I have never heard that they can be kept for any length of time upon anything but flesh food. I have had several at odd times, and have always fed them in this way, but then as I have not wanted them for long it was not a very difficult matter. I am inclined to think that if one was hand-rearing a specimen it could be given a certain quantity of insectile food with the meat, although as a rule when birds once get the taste of the stronger food, they refuse all other. The most simple way of feeding would be with odd pieces of meat from the butcher's, and set traps for mice and surplus sparrows. A beetle trap set at the baker's will add to his diet, the beetles should be given alive at sundown.

HAND-REARING LINNETS AND BULLFINCHES (Ranger).—Unless one is very careful, bread, when soaked, is liable to cause diarrhœa in young birds, particularly when given with rape-seed. If bread is used at all, it should be quite stale, then soaked in cold water for an hour, squeezed as dry as possible between the hands, and mixed with egg and biscuits; this makes a capital soft food when the young commence to feed themselves, care being taken that the glass or china vessel is washed clean twice a day. For hand-rearing you will find stale sponge cake, biscuit powder and hard-boiled egg much better. This should be mixed dry, and then a small quantity taken and made rather sloppy with new milk or diluted condensed. See that all the food given to the young ones is perfectly sweet. After a time add a little soaked rape and chopped green food to the mixture. If you can obtain a few live ants' eggs, or even good dried ones, they can also be used. You will find that in this way all the Finches can be safely hand-reared.

SCREENINGS FROM THRESHER (D. Davidson).—The sample of seed sent is in very good condition, and nicely ripened. Among others it contains corn marigold, thistle (just a trace), shepherd's purse, chickweed, and grass. The black seed I recognise as a plant that grows among the corn, particularly upon chalky soil. Wild Doves are very fond of it, but Finches scarcely touch it, so I would not advise you to force your bird to eat it. Let him pick it over and throw away what is left.

COLOUR FEEDING FINCHES AND MULES (H. Kay).—If you can obtain a good orange or yellow colour feed, it would be the right thing to use for your Finches, but I am afraid you will only be able to get the ordinary red feed. The orange food of which I have seen samples is simply the red food of lighter tone. A good yellow food was easily obtainable at one time, but the craze for high colour has put it off the market. I think if you feed with ordinary colour food, and give it lightly to all the Finches, you will get quite as much colour in them as is desirable. The Mules

NESTING GREENFINCHES (Greenie).—Of all our British Finches the "Greenbirds" are the most likely to incubate and rear the young in captivity, especially when flying in a good sized aviary. Take notice when the hen commences to sit, and on the thirteenth day give some soft food for rearing the young. This should consist of hard-boiled egg, powdered biscuit, and a few ants' eggs, or about a third of insectile food as used for Warblers, making the whole just crumbly moist. Also supply daily a little soaked seed, mostly rape, and a fair quantity of sunflower. Collect all kinds of seeding weeds, including grass, and give them a good handful twice a day.

EXHIBITING QUAILS (W.A.B.).—One scarcely looks upon a Quail as being a desirable cage bird for exhibitions. It is much nearer related to the Poultry than to Finches and Buntings; moreover, the bird does not figure in the rather extensive list of desirable cage birds, put together by the National British Bird and Mule Club. A cage for exhibition would require to be about 16 inches long, 9 inches wide, and 10 inches high. It would not need perches. The colour of the interior should be a rather bright middle green in tone. In a state of nature Quails feed upon insects and seeds. In captivity they should be fed upon crushed puppy biscuit soaked in hot water with a spoonful of ants' eggs or double the quantity of insectile food added. The seed they prefer is hemp, although they will eat canary and millet.

GOLDFINCH BALD (Westgate).—You appear to me to have treated your bird quite correctly, i.e., if the bareness is caused simply by loss of feather, because in that case it is just possible the plumage will commence to grow again shortly. If, on the other hand, it is caused through insects, the feathers will not grow again until the moult, the reason being that the insects eat the feathers, leaving the stumps in the skin, which do not come out until loosened by nature in the autumn. Examine him carefully for insects, and if he has any you must either hand-wash him and get rid of them, or try to remove them by the more natural means of letting him bathe in water to which has been added a few drops of strong essence of quassia. If no insects are found, treat as you are now doing, giving him a couple of doses of

Glauber salts, missing 2 or 3 days between the doses. Feed on soaked seeds, plenty of green food, and a cube of rather acid apple if you can obtain it.

BIRDS FOR AN AVIARY (W.H.S.).—Finches and Buntings would be very suitable birds for your aviary. A dozen cocks would do nicely, and if you had the following they would make a nice collection, and you would get a good deal of song from them: Linnet, Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Greenfinch, Siskin, Twite, Redpoll, Yellow Bunting, Cirl Bunting, Reed Bunting and Chaffinch. If for any reason you are unable to get all these, have a couple of Linnets or Goldfinches. You may possibly have some difficulty in getting a Cirl Bunting, but on no account leave out the Yellow and the Reed, these are very desirable.

HAND-REARED WHITETHROATS (F.G.H.).—Watch the nest and take the young just as they commence to shoot the quill feathers, and the eyes are opening. If you have access to the nest daily you could leave them a little later by commencing to hand-feed a few days before removing them. The nest is a rather flimsy construction, and should be placed in a suitable box or basket packed with hay. For the first few days feed every hour except at midday, when the intervals between the feeding times may be lengthened. Make a mixture of hard-boiled egg, stale sponge cake and ants' eggs or insectile food. Take a certain quantity of this and make rather sloppy with fresh new milk. Do not cram or overfeed them, just pack nicely so that they are contented. Occasionally mix a pinch of fine grit with the food. Give green fly, house flies, small caterpillars or any other tiny insects procurable, also a few live ants' eggs, which are capital food for them. When they can feed themselves, gradually work them on to best quality insectile food. Remember these Lesser Whitethroats are rather delicate birds, and require great care in hand feeding. The main thing is to see that all food is perfectly fresh and sweet and that they are kept nice and warm, particularly at night, and fed regularly. The first meal should be at daylight, and the last at sundown.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

MACAW WITH OVERGROWN BEAK (E. B. H.).—If the beak is abnormally long it must be filed or nipped off; if you cut too far back it makes it bleed, but putting a little Friar's balsam on the end will soon check this. It is difficult to give a definite pronouncement over the crop, but if it is unusually noticeable then it is not normal, and you had better let a vet. see it and diagnose what is wrong. I should give it several doses of Dinneford's magnesia, say four, with two days between each dose (one teaspoonful in the drinking water), this will correct but not unduly purge. Put a little honey and borax on its tongue (in its mouth) daily so long as the box lasts. Give the boiled maize fairly regularly, and put ten drops of cod-liver oil emulsion over each supply, this will help to feed the bird up. Hemp and sunflower seeds can be given liberally. Give the cod-liver oil emulsion daily, either on sponge-cake or the boiled maize. The dietary is satisfactory. If it cares for sultana plums such are quite legitimate. Barcelona, monkey, and walnuts may all be given liberally, but I should restrict the brazil nuts to one per diem. Report progress in two or three weeks, but continue the treatment regularly for a month at least. You can give the cod-liver oil emulsion daily for that or a longer period without fear. When reporting progress please fully describe its general symptoms and demeanour.

SICK COCKATEEL (F. J. H.).—Providing it does not distress the bird too much you could catch it and give it two or three drops of the cod-liver oil emulsion direct to the mouth daily, but unless it is a tame bird the scare of catching will nullify any good the remedy might do. Continue to treat as already advised for another fourteen days, then report again. It is impossible to say what the trouble actually is without seeing the bird, but when I get your next report I can form an opinion as to whether it is any use continuing to treat it or kinder to painlessly destroy it. It is too late to move the Cardinal if it has been infected by the Cockateel, but if there are other apparently healthy birds in the cage, you had better remove them. The Cardinal will do well on the same treatment, but it should have ripe fruit and occasional insects. I opine it is a case of senile decay with the Lovebirds. It is very creditable to you to have kept the Lovebirds for so many years.

WHAT PARROT? (An old Reader).—It is a Rosate Cockatoo. It should be fed on a mixture of giant Spanish canary seed, oats, dari, hemp, wheat, and sunflower seeds, the whole to be well mixed and then a quart of shelled monkey nuts added to each gallon of the mixture; again mix, and it is ready for use. In addition supply biscuits, stale crusts, green food, ripe fruit, and other nuts, grit, cuttlebone, and water must continually be in the cage, also a thick piece of a branch for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon. A good many individuals do not talk at all, more only a little, while a few become really talented. Talk to it, make a fuss of it, keep it where it will have plenty of company, yet withal not get scared, and it will ultimately prove responsive to some degree. They are fine acrobats and make droll pets even if they do not become very talkative.

RE-PAIRING BUDGERIGARS (F. J. Boulton).—Budgerigar breeders ought to ring their stock pairs, each pair with a different coloured ring, then such a difficulty as yours would never arise. I suggest making a rough box cage with a division in the middle, put one of the cocks in one compartment and leave door open of the other, his mate will try to get to him, and should be easily captured. If you happen to have several canary double-breeding cages the matter should be fairly simple. Otherwise you must catch all the birds up and put them in a cage when the pairs will mostly sit together on the perches, and it must depend on the keenness of your vision to follow their movements and catch them up pair by pair. If the young birds have moulted then there is no difference between them and the adults, but if they are this season's young then there will be no difficulty, as a little observation will show you.

WHAT PARROT? (Haddock).—It is an Indian Ring-necked Parrakeet and a cock bird, as the female has no neck-ring. Milk sop is altogether wrong, the dietary should consist of seed mixture, green-food, ripe fruit, nuts, and stale crusts, and pieces of biscuit. The bird may refuse some of these items, and while they tend to vary the dietary, if the bird refuses all else besides seed mixture and fruit it will do well thereon. A pair of these birds were recently advertised at 15s. the pair, but a talking male in good feather and that does not scream much has fetched anything from 40s. to 80s., but the latter price would only be given for a really talented bird.

WHAT BIRDS? (Zehra).—Your sketches make it quite easy to name your birds. No. 1, Taha Weaver, The wording of the schedule would fix the class, as a rule, the birds are all named in the common class, and unless it was so named I should not care to include in the common class. No 2 is a Heck's Long-tailed Grassfinch (Poephila hecki), the Long-tailed Grassfinch (P. Acuticauda) has a yellow beak. No. 3 is the Masked Grassfinch (Poephila personata). All three interesting and beautiful.

WHAT AFRICAN SPECIES? (Wyburn).—Your description is altogether too vague, there are numbers of African species that would fit. Are there no variegations on the back and wings? Is the tail long or short? What are the markings on the sides of the head (face)? I cannot help you unless you can give me a fuller description. I will keep your query by me awaiting your further details.

GETTING PARROT ON TO HARD SEED (J.H.).—You will, of course, keep a tin each of boiled maize and dry seed mixture in the cage. Then you could partly fill one of the tins with dry seed and put a little boiled maize in the top of same. Even when it is eating dry seed freely you must not stop the boiled maize too suddenly, it must be gradually weaned from same. You had better get our Grey Parrot Nutshell, 2½d. post free from our manager, it will give you full details. In addition to seed supply it with ripe fruit, shelled nuts, biscuit, stale crusts, and plain cake. Grit, cuttlebone, and water must continually be in the cage, also a thick piece of a branch for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon.

BUDGERIGARS NOT BREEDING (J.S.).—You are treating them quite correctly, and it is merely a case of them settling down, once a brood has been reared you will have no further difficulty. They are now moulting and are not in breeding condition, but seeing that the season in captivity does not terminate till September or October, there is plenty of time for you to pull off a brood yet. It might stimulate them if you had another cage, containing another pair of either the yellow or green varieties standing near them, each pair within sight of the other; though not caged together; seeing each other's operation may act as a stimulant to breeding activity for both pairs.

A PROSPECTIVE AVIARY (L. Grayson).—The place "22 long—15 high—14 deep" (I presume the figures stand for feet) would certainly do for Budgerigars and other Parrakeets. Your best course will be to send me a ground plan and elevation, showing where the partitions are placed, and also mark out on ground plan the space you could give for flight. You could use the spare room for a similar purpose. You had better send me a plan of this also, marking out on plan, the positions of door, fire-place, and window; also give the aspects of the outdoor place and the spare room. If you enclose a stamped, addressed envelope I will send you a rough plan to work from and state which would best serve your purpose.

COCKATOO AND CHAIN (Cockie).—(1) Yes, you could put an ordinary Parrot-chain on your Cockatoo and either chain it to an upright stand or to a stake in the ground if you so preferred, but a chained Cockatoo should only be so fastened up when you are in the garden, as though well able to render a good account of itself against any cat, yet with its liberty curtailed it might easily be taken by surprise and at a disadvantage. (2) It is one of the races of Ring-necked Parrakeets, very similar to an Alexandrine.

SUMMER-HOUSE FOR BUDGERIGARS (A.M.C.).—If you have the interior of the summer-house well washed down with strong soda-water and then give it a coat of limewash (made from fresh lime, not whiting) it should be perfectly safe for you to use the summer-house for Budgerigars. All glass must be covered with wire netting on the inside, and it is well to arrange small hinged doors by which the food and water vessels can be attended to from the outside, so that it will only be necessary to go inside occasionally for cleaning purposes. It would be best to fix fine mesh wire netting 18 inches into the ground all round the summer-house to prevent vermin burrowing their way in. Have only tree branches for perching and roosting accommodation, and fix or hang up at least double the number of nesting husks or barrels that you have pairs of birds.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

WHAT I SAY I MEAN

Egg foods and colour foods. The best fanciers have ever known. "Eggertine," which rears Canaries far better than any other preparation known, is made from new-laid English eggs, and not useless dried yolk of egg, has also many other valuable ingredients. It is not therefore a substitute but a genuine egg food, 1/3 and 2/6 per tin, post free; it can also be all ready mixed and made into a red or yellow feed ready for use without any preparation by the user; same price. My Red Feeds at 1/10 per lb., 1/- ½lb., postage extra, are unsurpassable. Kept in the original air and dust-proof tins, thus insuring all their fullest properties. The "Excelsior Blend" is the finest Red Feed ever put on to the market; it is the reddest colour produced procurable, being a correct mixture of hot pepper and sweet. Samples of this feed free, or samples of any above, with pamphlet on colour-feeding, etc., two stamps: Rudd, Specialist, Norwich. (302)

The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

Messrs. Spratt's Patent, Ltd., as usual provided the benches and saw to the feeding of the dogs at the recent show of the Ladies' Kennel Association. A number of wounded soldiers and sailors availed themselves of an invitation to the show, and were entertained at tea.

Mr. Geo. Reed, late sec. Brandon Colliery C.B.S., sends us a statement as follows, with a request that we publish the same: "This is to certify that we have examined the accounts of the Brandon Colliery C.B.S., and every satisfaction has been given.—(Signed), W. Anderson, A. Taylor."

In the June issue of the "Avicultural Magazine, the journal of the Avicultural Society, the Duchess of Bedford concludes her "Spring Bird-Notes from Scottish Islands." An instructive article on the winter treatment of foreign birds, with some very instructive deductions from an experience with about 400 specimens, is written by Dr. Lovell-Keays, and among other articles are "Nesting of Jardine's Pigmy Owl," by Miss . Chawner, "Are Birds Deceitful?" by Dr. A. G. Butler, etc.

The Robin's Breakfast Bacon.

Robins have built their nest in a class-room at Bradford College. The cock bird breakfasts every morning with the secretary, Mr. Money. It likes bacon better than anything else for this meal.

OBITUARY.

MR. A. WELCH (Winchester).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. W. L. Page, hon. sec., Southampton C.B.S., that I inform you of the death of Mr. Arthur Welch, of Winchester. He had been a member of our society since its commencement, and was an enthusiastic Norwich fancier; he will be missed by the various societies at whose shows he exhibited. Mr. Welch was 36 years of age, and leaves a wife and young daughter, to whom I am sure members of the Southampton C.B.S. will extend their deepest sympathy. Mr. Welch had been ill since early in February, and although he appeared to improve a short time ago he passed away on May 29.

PRIVATE R. LANE, 6th D.L.I.

I am sorry to have to inform you, writes Mr. J. W. Robson, sec. Burnhope C.B.S., of the sad loss to Mr. G. Lane, who has lost his brother, Private R. Lane, 6th Durham Light Infantry, who died at Liverpool. The deceased was through the Boer war, and responded to his country's call in the present war. He had his leg blown off at Hill 60, and died six weeks afterwards, and was buried at West Auckland. I am sure friends in Stanley and district give their sympathy to Mr. G. Lane, and the widow and four children left by the deceased soldier.

MR. WILLIAM ROLLAND (Dunfermline).

By the death of William Rolland Dunfermline has lost its veteran fancier, writes Mr. R. T. Campbell, sec. Dunfermline C.B.S. Few were more respected in the Fancy in the district than "Auld Wullie." Of a quiet unpretending disposition, he was a man of few words, but one whose opinion on all subjects pertaining to our hobby demanded respect. While acting as President of our Society, his duties of chairmanship were performed ungrudgingly, and his rulings were always unbiassed. His spare time was wholly devoted to the care of his birds, and many a good British did he have through his hands. A good Linnet or Goldfinch seemed to appeal to him most, and right well did he know one at first sight. He was a real, typical old Scot, an enthusiastic admirer and student of the National Bard, and a keen and clever draught player. Blessed with a good memory, his reminiscences of his early days in the Fancy were always brimful of interest. I know I voice the feelings of our members and of those in the Fancy in general who came in touch with this venerable soul, in expressing to his two sisters our deepest sympathy in their bereavement.

A Persevering Thrush.

"L. A. J.," in the "Glasgow Evening Citizen," tells of a Song Thrush who began to build on Mar. 29 last, hatched four young by April 14, repaired her nest and sat again by May 4, and, on this nest being destroyed by some enemy, built a third nest and began to sit for the third time on May 23.

Half-pint Cups as Wagtails' Nests.

In the saloon of a fishing smack, "The Peace," of West Mersea, which has been laid up for a few weeks, Wagtails have completed two nests, and have begun a third, in enamelled tin mugs. One of the completed nests has five eggs in it.

The Long Arm of Coincidence.

The winter of 1913-14 was marked by an extraordinary irruption into England of the Waxwing, a bird which has long had the reputation of being the harbinger of war and famine. On the Continent it also spread in immense flocks, and throughout Germany and Russia its presence was most noticeable. The circumstance will doubtless go far to uphold the tradition which has caused this beautiful bird to be known throughout northern Europe by names equivalent to bird of war or pestilence.

The Latest of All.

The last of our summer migrants, the Marsh Warbler, has lately reported himself, says "S" in the "Manchester Guardian," and is now singing exquisitely in his favourite osiers. In the oppressive and motionless air preceding a thunderstorm last evening, the monotonous notes of the Grasshopper Warbler reached my ears. I had not previously heard him this year, and it seemed as if the bird had come into existence to express the magnetic tension and suspense of the moment, which left the very aspen leaves unmoved.

A Confiding Missel Thrush.

A short time ago I found in a pear tree in my orchard a Missel Thrush's nest. As you know, the Missel Thrush is a very shy bird, but this bird allowed me to stroke and pat her while she was sitting her eggs, and for a week after hatching I daily visited the nest and stroked her, and not once during my doing so did she fly away. I have also either a Wren's or a Tom Tit's nest, which I found made in a 2lb. jam pot, the pot was on its side on a rubbish heap, and the nest was beautifully made inside, but no eggs in it. I may say that I have the jar and nest in my possession.—John Goodwin, Old Colwyn.

Mr. Longden Happily Recovering.

The many friends of Mr. D. A. S. Longden (Swansea) will be glad to hear that his health is much improved, and that he is now on the road to recovery. For some weeks his life was despaired of, but I am pleased to say that when I saw him last week there was a marked improvement in his condition. Mr. Longden has been a tower of strength to the Fancy in Wales for a great number of years, and I am sure all Welsh fanciers, with a host of fancier friends outside the principality, will join with me in wishing him a speedy and complete recovery. Mr. Longden wishes me to thank the many friends who have sent kind enquiries during his illness. At present he is unable to reply to them, but later on hopes to do so.—S. J. Nicholas (Swansea).

The Fruits of Dependence.

Characterising Sparrows as parasites on man, the "Times" says: "More than any other birds, they have lost the clean precision of natural habit by persistent familiarity with human dwellings. There are now no perfectly wild Sparrows. They always nest near inhabited buildings, if not actually upon them; and the nests have such a slovenly diversity in shape, material, and situation that we can only make an uncertain guess at their original structure, when the Sparrow was still a wild bird. The result upon the Sparrow has not been happy, except from a purely material standpoint; the Sparrow has clearly suffered in character from his dependent status; he is prompt to seize a momentary advantage, but devoid of the measure of far-sightedness which we find in the Raven or the Magpie. He is the only bird that can justly be called vulgar—not because he is noisy or self-assertive or dirty in his tastes and habits, as many wild birds are, but because his real nature has become hopelessly overlaid by acquired habits. He is sufficiently humanized to mirror a human weakness."

"I am pleased to inform you that I received many replies from various parts of the country to my last advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, as the enclosed letters prove."—W. FOXEN (Bromley).

"Kindly thank all who answered my advt. in CAGE BIRDS over Yorkshire Hens. I had replies from all over England (30), and am unable to reply to all. Wishing CAGE BIRDS every success. Delighted with C.B. Annual 'as usual.'"—W. H. HARRIS (Dorchester).

ARE OUR JUDGING METHODS ANTIQUATED?

IT will be obvious how impossible it would be for any judge to ignore the standard, if this system were adopted, and how much more interesting and instructive it would be to follow his judging than is now the case. I have often found experienced and well-known fanciers quite unable to say with any certainty for what reason a bird has been put up or down. This is not as it should be. By this method you are comparing each bird with the ideal, and not with the other birds in the class, and it is only when the net points are compared that the winners are apparent. In our judging competitions we had only one bird on the table at a time, and there was surprisingly little difference of opinion at the finish.

One great difficulty is that judging by points is unpopular with some judges, which is perhaps natural, for even with competent judges it adds to their responsibilities, and, as one very candid gentleman remarked to me, "It's all right with those varieties you know, but you can't do it with those you don't," a remark which should set exhibitors thinking.

I think, however, that really competent men would soon lose their objections after getting accustomed to it; it would certainly enable them to give their real opinion of "Birds in the making," as Mr. Allsopp puts it, which they may be obliged to put up through want of competition, and it would prevent such birds from being foisted on the unwary novice as "winners under so and so," etc.

An End to "Fairy Tales."

Incompetent men might probably oppose it to the last, as nothing so certainly and surely shows up a man's incapacity as having to commit himself to a definite statement. It is easier to suggest that a bird was slack, or wild, or had a bath in the water-tin, or any of the other fairy tales to which we have grown accustomed. Of course such things do happen, and if so it would have to be stated on the card at the time, and could not be used as a mere get-out afterwards.

The incomplete nature of some of the present standards forms another but not insuperable difficulty; they would certainly be improved by the societies responsible for them if they found it necessary. This is one of those difficulties that disappear as soon as the job is tackled in earnest; as soon as any body of fanciers found their variety handicapped by a poor standard, they would promptly alter it. Under present conditions no one bothers much about standards, each individual being free to indulge his own particular fad to his heart's content, but with points judging type would become the very first consideration.

The importance of this point will be more readily felt when we consider the well-known fact that almost all fanciers have a tendency to put an undue value on anything difficult to obtain. This is all right if kept within reasonable bounds, and the purpose of the standard of perfection is to prevent its being over-done, but if this tendency is allowed to have too free a scope men can gradually train themselves to admire qualities which being neither beautiful nor useful are only appreciated by a "cultured few" who get fewer still as time goes on, for there is little likelihood of the general public being attracted by what are merely fancy properties.

In the Copper Kettle Days.

Perhaps the greatest difficulty of all is to get people to believe that it is worth while to trouble about the matter; yet denunciations are poured on the heads of the novices, etc., for their lack of interest. Some of the older men get quite worked up when on this subject, and love to tell how, when they were novices, they tramped miles to shows, and were well satisfied with a copper kettle, or even a much more trifling prize, and so on.

It would be much more to the point if we tried to adapt ourselves to modern needs, and we find that where this has been done in any branch of fancy or sport, that particular sport has prospered and kept up its popularity.

One of the most striking demands at the present time in any form of competition is that there shall be a substantial prize for those who win, and that the loss shall be small for those who lose, and I think it is safe to say that unless these conditions are fulfilled, particularly the former one, there is no chance of continued popularity. In our shows the very opposite extreme prevails, the prize-money being trifling and the expenses out of all proportion.

This state of things is brought about, in my opinion, by over-classification; in order to give a fair chance under present conditions, a class for almost every possible variation has to be provided, and, to make matters worse, we have now a growing demand from novices for a full classification for themselves. Then comes a demand for amateur classes, and if we go on like this there will soon be as many classes as birds. It is of course obvious that with few entries per class and many classes prize money will grow smaller and smaller, and to find specials alone constitutes a great drain on societies.

Justice for Common Species.

This extraordinary demand for so many classes is, in my opinion, brought about by the system of judging, for it has grown to be a general practice to favour certain varieties. In British and Foreign classes it is most unusual to find a common species standing well up in a mixed competition, however good a specimen of its kind it may be, nor in Canary classes will a marked bird beat a clear, or a buff a yellow, unless immeasurably superior.

If the demand for classes were brought about by the increase in birds shown, it would be a natural demand, and could be conceded to without decreasing prize money or lessening competition, but when it simply is due to want of confidence in the manner of judging, it is in my opinion responsible for most of the troubles affecting the Fancy to-day.

Keep the Ball Rolling.

Surely it is well worth while to take a little extra trouble if by doing so we can revive interest in our hobby, which would never have been able to survive if a natural liking for birds were not strongly implanted in many men's natures. This being the case, it follows that if it is not so popular as in times gone by (?) there must be some sound reason for it. It is for us to find out what it is, and make alterations to suit.

I notice one significant fact: The men who give up the bird fancy for other hobbies do not go in for any of the things that are said to be ousting us from popularity. On the contrary, they generally go in for some kindred hobby, such as fowls, pigeons, or dogs, where they can indulge in the same natural tastes and still get a bit of their own back.

I will conclude my advocacy of the system I have herein suggested by trusting that some more prominent fancier than myself may take the matter up and put his influence into the scale.

THE MYSTERY OF "BIRD FEVER."

By W. VALE, F.Z.S., &c. (South Norwood).

(Contd. from p. 247.

Author of "The Science of Living," Manuals of Canary, Poultry, etc., Diseases, "How to Feed Canaries," e c.

THE immediate cause of septic fever, the so-called bird fever, is a ferment, which, like all ferments, multiplies under favourable conditions at a prodigious rate. A temperature above the normal may be favourable to its reproduction, but this depends upon the composition of the blood of the creature attacked, its previous diet, and the condition of its kidneys. The immediately exciting cause of the disease may be a chill of the kidneys, causing them to become congested. When the kidneys are congested they would naturally fail to efficiently perform their natural function of ridding the blood of effete matter, and then, when it is overloaded with amyloid matter, a ferment would be set up in it. This would have the effect of thickening the blood so as to be the cause of general congestion. When the liver is congested the process of digestion is arrested, yet the subject may be hungry for food.

Early Symptons.

When birds first become the subjects of septic fever they may be noticed to be going very frequently to the seed box to pick out seed without devouring more than perhaps two or three seeds. They then retire from it and become "heapy," that is, their plumage stands out from their bodies, and their heads are drawn in. Owing to the blood having become thickened, and the excess of urea retained in it, the subject becomes more or less sleepy, and later on stupor sets in, if the bird does not succumb during an earlier stage of the disease. This in many cases is the result of very acute inflammation of the lungs, or of a ruptured vessel in the brain and effusion of blood into it—apoplexy. The vessel gives way owing to weakness due to fatty degeneration and thickening of the blood due to fermentation. In some cases clots are formed in the blood, and are the cause of death from embolism, that is, the plugging of a large blood-vessel leading from the heart, or, when a small vessel has become plugged, loss of power in one wing, or the paralysis of one leg may result.

One bird in an aviary the subject of septic fever may be the cause of all the birds in it perishing within a very short time of each other, if they are predisposed to be destroyed, owing to an unnatural condition of their blood. The chief predisposing causes are feeding with a diet containing an excess of digestible solids, and more especially an excess in proportion to the flesh-forming elements. Every substance devoured of which a portion may enter the blood should rightly be considered as a part of the diet of a creature, even mineral matter, of which, according to circumstances, more or less is required. The bones of a creature are chiefly composed of mineral matter, and during their formation more is required than at any other time, except when the hard shells of eggs have to be formed in a bird. But at any time an excess of mineral matter in the diet is a predisposing cause of disease, including "bird fever," by causing disorganisation of the kidneys. It tends to choke the tubes in the kidneys, and prevent them efficiently performing their natural functions—that is, the elimination of waste matter out of the blood. An excess of digestible solids in the diet also tends to overtax the kidneys.

When there is an excess of cheesy fat-forming matter in the diet this excess is fairly certain to be deposited in the kidneys, so that they gradually become less and less able to efficiently perform their natural functions. The result is a predisposition for a ferment to be set up in the blood, and more especially after a chill. Not only do the kidneys become overloaded, but the liver and spleen, and when a ferment has been set up in the blood the liver and spleen become gorged with dark fluid blood, and as a consequence septic fever is in some cases called splenic fever, the term being applied when decomposition of the spleen has taken place. Birds, however, do not live until that very advanced stage has been reached, as is the case with large animals.

In all cases of septic fever the subjects are in an overfat condition, mostly to the extent of fatty degeneration of the kidneys, liver and spleen, and each is usually very much enlarged, but apparently the chief cause of fatality is a disorganised condition of the kidneys. At least, this is my opinion based on the fact that amongst the hundreds of birds which are annually examined by me after death from septic fever not one has been found with sound kidneys.

A Simple Remedy in Mild Cases.

In advanced cases there is not the slightest chance of a cure being effected, but in mild ones a fourth of a drop of B.P. tincture of aconite may be given every three or four hours until three or four doses have been given, and this treatment may be followed by giving an antiseptic saline mixture which may be prepared by any chemist; the aconite may be given in a few drops of camphor water. The aconite is given to bring down the temperature, and allay the fevered condition, and the antiseptic saline mixture to purify the blood as far as possible, and arrest its decomposition. In mild cases recovery may result from treatment with a saline antiseptic mixture only. In all cases a suitable diet is of very great importance; it is necessary for this to be highly nourishing, but such as will not overtax the kidneys, or digestive organs.

There is not any more certain preventive treatment than a suitable diet. When one understands that the blood is formed from the foodstuffs devoured one must arrive at the conclusion that the composition of the blood must in the first place mainly depend upon the diet supplied to a creature, and in the second place upon the power of the kidneys and other organs to keep it pure. Waste matter from worn-out tissues is constantly being absorbed into the blood, and it is the function of the kidneys and other organs to clear the blood of it. Feeding with an unsuitable diet is a frequent cause of disease, and certainly an aggravation of almost any diseased condition. It is erroneous to suppose that any specific disease is the result of the mere neglect of cleanliness. As a matter of fact, one meets with more cases of septic fever amongst birds kept under ideal conditions as regards the cleanliness of their environments than amongst those which have in this respect been neglected, and this is probably owing to the former having been fed on a much more generous diet as regards the quantity of digestible solids in it.

By S. Midgley, sec. of the Yorkshire Union of Cage Bird Societies.

THE above subject was introduced at the last Council meeting of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S. Before giving the views of the various members present, it may be of interest to quote the rule of the Union governing novice competitors. "A novice is one who has not previously won a novice medal, or a first prize in open classes at any show. Any person residing in the same house as a champion exhibitor shall be debarred from competing as a novice (first prizes in selling classes and first feather shows are not included). This rule shall not apply to novice classes at non-union or members' shows."

For further enlightenment I may say that the Union decides the number of gold medals that will be given for competition for novices at the Yorkshire Union shows. At the first meeting of the newly-elected Council this year the number was fixed at eight, six for Yorkshires and two for Norwich. At the end of the show season exhibitors gaining the highest number of points (four birds to count for each exhibitor) are to be declared the winners.

In introducing the subject the delegates' idea was that something should be done to define the standing of the novice, seeing that some prominent exhibitors remained novices year after year, and the wish was expressed that a small committee be appointed to try to frame a rule to stop these old-fashioned novices from exhibiting at a few shows, and then dropping out. Such were novices according to rule only, and not in the spirit, and this is somewhat of a hardship to the real novice.

Several delegates spoke with regard to novice medal winners not being heard of after winning their medals, and of the difficulty they had to win in the champion classes, especially those who had not bred the birds to win their medal with. Some gave as the reason the champion claiming the novice winners and thus depriving the real novice of his bird, also his opportunity to go forward unless he was prepared to purchase others. Everyone not being able to do so, maybe his chances were put back unless he had a large stud of show birds. The average novice, only possessing a small selection, and being desirous of winning his novice medal with his own bred birds, was disappointed when he had one claimed, for sometimes his chance had gone for that season.

Is the Price Limit a Failure?

One of the older delegates said this had been up before, and especially since the price limit was raised from £3 to £5. You make one to regulate the other, he said, and yet the difficulty still crops up, and if the catalogue price was raised again it would still be the same.

One mentioned the old way of winning three first prizes, and then being declared a champion. This was pointed out as being very unsatisfactory. At the very beginning of the season those who had previously won two may come along and get the third, making it very difficult to form any idea of the number of winners in one season.

The feeling prevailed that the real novice should be given an opportunity of having a good run and a full season, but what was to be done? With those that held back some years ago a sealed competition was inaugurated to draw a given number of shows out at the end of the season, thus leaving the exhibitors in the dark as to how they were going on, no one knowing where points were going to count. They had also divided the season into two parts, those winning medals in the first half coming up into the champion section for the second half.

The question seems full of difficulties, and one must keep in view the societies that run the shows. At the back end of the season the entries seem to fall away, and something to benefit the societies and keep interest would be welcomed. At the conclusion the remark was made "You have a qualification for an amateur; why not for a novice?"

Correspondence.

Singing Finch-Canary Hybrids.

Sir,—In reply to H. Kay in the Correspondence Columns of Cage Birds for June 12 re "Singing Finch-Canary Hybrids," I write to say that I have a splendid specimen of the Green Singing Finch-Canary Hybrid bred last season, 1914, which I purchased from an advertisement in Cage Birds. Being a young one, I colour-fed it before the first moult, and he is now a fine bird, showing well both parentages. It is a very active bird and a capital songster, and is rather larger than a cock green Singing-Finch. Two were advertised, and I wrote for both, but the other one was not old enough to send. My bird has one or two light feathers in tail.

F. J. Weaire.

The Breast Colour of Caged Linnets.

Sir.—I should be grateful for any observations from your readers respecting the plumage of the common brown Linnet in captivity. I hear on every hand that his rosy breast and cap disappear after the first moult, for reasons variously attributed to questions of sex, diet, and the absence of liberty.

In October, 1913, I bought two cock Linnets, neither had the slightest suspicion of rose colour, in fact the two were almost indistinguishable. About the end of December last year, one of them began to show flecks of colour upon his breast, and these throughout January spread and deepened in colour until now his breast is entirely covered a rich brownish-crimson, and his head is marked in a somewhat lesser degree. The two Linnets have had for companions a Lesser Redpoll and a Siskin—both cocks—and have been kept in the house in a cage about 16 x 30 inches in size. They have all fed from a common trough, and the other Linnet is as brown as when I bought him. Any information upon this interesting matter would be acceptable.

Strange Relations.

A Parrot Hatches a Fowl's Egg.

Sir,—Mr. G. Pledge, of Bermondsey Settlement Lodge, London, S.E., bought a female Rock Parrot from Messrs. De Von and Co., Bethnal Green Road, some eight or nine years ago, and this season it has laid two eggs, which of course were not fertile. The owner of the bird, seeing it wished to sit them, purchased two fowls' eggs from an egg-shop, picking out the smallest he could find. He substituted these fowls' eggs for the Parrot's, and one chick was hatched. It is now five days old, and the Parrot mothers it with the greatest fondness. The foster-mother and child are both doing well, and can be seen at the above address. I have asked the owner to have them photographed and send a print on to you.

The Craze for Size in Norwich Plainheads.

Sir.—I should like to correct the note made by Mr. Allsopp in your issue of June 5, where I appear to hold up the Cinnamon as an example of size attained without recourse to alien blood; this is not the view I wish the young fancier to take. I explained why I considered the Norwich was not in need of an outside cross as an aid to size, and showed that size was obtained in other varieties by selection, but did not say how. Old fanciers know these breeds were built up gradually, all birds of their particular variety not showing improvement on their old stock being disposed of whenever possible. No doubt the Norwich Plainhead of good size was as eagerly searched for in those days as is the case today by breeders whose stock is lacking in that very essential property. We all know there are some breeders of every variety who produce anything and everything they can get, who never think of discarding small birds or birds with long ugly beaks, small narrow heads, long thin necks and bodies, hunching backs, stilty legs, rough feathers, long flights and tails; birds that have been ill during the preceding moult and through the winter, bad layers, sitters and feeders. These breeders of the weaklings and undesirables gradually pull down their particular fancy year by year, distributing their specimens to all parts and incidentally causing others to breed more wasters which go further down the social scale of Canary life until this or that variety is in danger of extinction. This is the class of breeder who is in most need of information. The initiated does not need it; if he cannot act up to his knowledge, no information is of service, as he will go his own way; but to the breeder who is willing, and will act up to the standard required for progress, not only do we give help, but save further deterioration in stock.

Judging to Standard.

Sir,—I read with interest Mr. G. M. Davey's article on the Crested Canary and its breeding, and as a starter in this breed I am pleased to say I have bred this year a Clear-body Dark-crest from a very good pair; he is a cock and doing well for himself. I think it is a great pity that fanciers resort to personalities when writing about different breeds; we want to know how the birds are bred, not the personal differences of breeders. I also think that if societies would select judges who have the courage of their convictions, fanciers would stand by them, knowing their birds would be judged according to standard. I have kept British birds and Canaries during twenty-five years, ever since as a boy I saved my pennies and gave seven and six for a Goldfinch in a fancier's shop in West Norwood, and I have visited shows, both North and South, as business permitted. At the shows I have often heard the remark from fanciers that you should show that bird under so and so; he likes this or that. If exhibits were judged according to the standard drawn up, exhibitors would know what to breed, and have confidence in showing.

The Proposed Amalgamated Show at Sheffield.

Sir,—In Cage Birds of June 5 I observe a report of a meeting mentioning all the local societies and excluding the Sheffield O.S. For the interest of the local fanciers it will perhaps be advisable for me to explain the circumstances. At the commencement of the year we received a communication from the Sheffield C.B.S. informing us that it had been suggested that an amalgamated show be held in Sheffield for the benefit of some local charity, and run on the lines as follows: That each society be represented by three delegates, who should act as a committee for the working of the show, all those participating to stand equal shares to make up the deficit, if any, also that no fancier could exhibit unless his society was taking a share of the possible loss. This letter was discussed in committee, and it was decided that we do not take any active part, but support the venture to the utmost. If the Sheffield C.B.S. wanted to be charitable, why not have adopted the lines on which we ran a similar show last November, when we made a bumping profit for the local relief fund. We did not ask for assistance, neither did we ask any society to stand by us in case of loss; we ran it entirely on our own responsibility, with our own committee and officials, and gave the members of other societies the privilege to exhibit. A rather amusing feature is that the date fixed for this charitable venture is Oct. 30, the Saturday before our All-England show, which takes place on Nov. 5 and 6, and will be held as fixed, that is, if we are still British. Was it done with an idea of being detrimental to the S.O.S. venture? If so, I am afraid it will cause a great disappointment to the Amalgamated officials. I can assure you the Sheffield O.S. is going as strong as ever, and will hold a record show in November, and no doubt increase the bank balance of £71, a balance which no other society can boast of.

Good Intentions Frustrated.

English Roller Breeding as a Solace.

Sir,—It is now a little more than twelve months ago since I wrote you that letter in reference to "Obtaining sunshine by the aid of Mirrors." As I look back, I think how rapidly times have changed since then. At the outbreak of war I began to see first one and then another fellow fancier and workmate leaving for the war stations of the various regiments, and by the end of the first month, (August, 1914) I found I could stand it no longer, so, although I am 37 to-day, June 14, and have a wife and four kiddies, I gave up my situation and joined the 7th H.L.I. This meant selling, or rather giving away, most of my stock of Foreigners and British. I signed for four years' foreign service, but, alas, fate decreed that I was not to go to war. After being mobilized for six months, my feet and ankles gave way, and I was sent home as unfit; not very pleasant for me, but I couldn't do more, so now I must get my solace from my old friends the birds. This time I intend to devote the whole of my hobby to the breeding of a good strain of British-bred Rollers, as I feel sure in a few years' time they will be a very profitable as well as pleasant hobby, and I hope the fanciers of to-day who, like myself, are to remain at home, will do their best to encourage the breeding of this beautiful little songster.

I should very much like to know if any of my fellow readers of Cage Birds have ever bred Bullies in a large cage indoors. I am trying with a pair of very steady birds in a box-cage about 4ft. x 2ft. I have actually seen them tread, so have fitted it up with imitation shrubs, etc. I have put some soil in one end, and scattered some seeds into it; they seem quite steady and business-like in their present surroundings. Of course, it is just a fancy I took to try them, and if there are any results I'll let you "ken," as they say in Scotland.

I must close by wishing every success to dear old Cage Birds, sincerely hoping it will continue to flourish.

Stanley Dare.

Concerning the Cuckoo.

Sir,—In the correspondence columns of the June 5 issue of Cage Birds I notice that "Bird Keeper" asks a question as to the exhibiting of Cuckoos, and I also should be glad to know if it is possible to keep a Cuckoo in health in captivity for three years, as stated in "Country Life."

Exhibitor.

[It is certainly "possible" to keep a Cuckoo; whether the task is an enviable one is another matter. One of our readers, Mrs. Sergeant, has kept the species successfully, and has often recounted her experiences. As to their being "very frequently" exhibited, the statement may be said to err on the side of frequency. We have a dim recollection of once seeing a Cuckoo at an exhibition, but we are not quite certain of this. We have certainly not seen them "very frequently."—Editor, "C.B."]

Proposed Fanciers' Protection Association.

Sir,—I am greatly interested in the above scheme, as I think it is time something was done to put a stop to the practices carried on by some. Now the deposit system adopted by Cage Birds is very good, but say a certain fancier is advertising some of his stock in this week's issue, the first P.O.'s that arrive get the birds. By adopting the deposit system, your letter would be a day later, and dealers don't like to have to wait for their money. The only satisfaction you have is knowing that you have not been taken in. I shall only be too pleased to become a member of the above. I wish it every success.

BIRD LIFE IN THE FIRING LINE.

Thrush Removes Her Young Under Fire.

Sir.—Capt. H. R. Wilson, 5th Durham L.I., writes to "The Field" as follows: "We were in an ordinary fire trench and under a pretty constant shell and rifle fire. About 15 yards to the right rear of the right flank of the trench I noticed in a small tree a Thrush's nest full of young birds, about four days old. The hen bird was flying backwards and forwards, and what surprised me was that she did not feed them although they were hungry. I watched the old bird's movements, and after one or two more journeys she picked a young one up in her beak and flew away with it out of sight, returning quickly and taking the others away one by one. Whether she had prepared another nest for them or not I do not know." This seems to me to be the most curious of the many strange actions of birds at the front of which we have been lately hearing. I should be glad to know if anyone has ever before known a Thrush to carry her young.

Avis.

Blackbirds Reared in a Battery.

Sir.—The various letters which have appeared in Cage Birds telling of the indifference of wild birds to the terrific cannonading going on all around them have been so interesting that I am sure readers of our paper will like to know of the following letter sent by an English officer to the "Field":—

"A battery of howitzers has been in action here in the same position for some months in an orchard. A Blackbird built a nest actually on the sand bag parapet surrounding one of the guns, and although this gun has been constantly fired, she has successfully hatched out her eggs. This nest is within a yard of the muzzle of the gun. About ten yards in the rear of the same gun a Blackcap is sitting on eggs in a hollow tree stump. A little further off on the right of the battery a Wren built a nest within the perch of an ammunition waggon. When the nest was first built, this waggon was in action with its section a quarter of a mile further down the road. Subsequently, this section changed position, and came into action in its present place, the Wrens and their nest coming along with it. All the birds in the neighbourhood seem so accustomed to the noise now that they take no notice of it. The following birds I have seen within rifle range of the German trenches:—Blackbird, Yellow Bunting, Sparrow, Pigeon, Wren, Tits, Lark, Rook, Hooded Crow, Jackdaw, Magpie, Mallard, Teal, Moorhen, Redshank, Cuckoo, Golden Oriole, Kestrel, Starling, Blackcap, and Partridge."

An Old Reader.

It is rather a delightful picture, says a correspondent to "The Times," that we have revealed to us now and then, in letters from the front, of the men in the trenches making friends with the small birds which begin more and more to be their companions as the spring comes on. Skylarks, running over the ground, Robins, most cheeky and friendly of all their kind, Blackbirds, and many more seem to be doing their best, in some parts of the far-flung line, to cheer a monotony that must be very trying. Their indifference to the firing, to the almost constant sound of the big field guns coming from afar and the more occasional snapping of the rifles close to hand, seems to be the point that strikes the writers most forcibly.

The Robins perch on the trenches' edge, they are tempted into the very trenches themselves, to have a share of the rations. "Came and perched on my bayonet, the little beggar did," as one of the soldiers said, "when I put it up out of the trench—just the same as a Christmas card." Sometimes in course of a heavy cannonading the Skylarks, high in the sky through which the shells are hurtling, go singing as if their ambition were to drown the noise of the bombardment.

There is nothing at all abnormal, nothing that should surprise us, about this indifference of the birds to a great noise to which they have become accustomed. For that is all that the incessant firing means to them. We are so apt to associate guns with the killing of birds that we are disposed to think that the birds must have the like association in their minds. But really we do not need to go to the battlefields to prove that this association has no existence for them. Those of us who have lain crouched behind a moor dyke to shoot the grouse coming in to feed on the corn stooks of a field that is next neighbour to the heather will know that, so long as the birds do not catch sight of us, we may often go on killing bird after bird till we have made an absolute end of all that are feeding within range.

Mere noise has very little terror for birds, as we may see by the confidence with which a Thrush will continue sitting on her nest on the side of a railway cutting while an express train goes by at 60 miles an hour. This year it has been noticed in the Midlands that there are many more than usual of the Green Plover—that kindly bird which lays for us the "Plovers' eggs." It is not to be doubted that they are there because they have found their usual nesting grounds on the plains of Flanders in the occupation of great armies. It is not the guns, but the men, that have made them come to us for some domestic peace. We have yet to see in what way and to what extent the spring migrations of birds to this country are affected by all the fearful events in Europe.

But though the birds soon grow indifferent to the noise of firing, there is much evidence that they are keenly sensitive to the impact of big air-waves. When the Zeppelins paid their first visit to Norfolk in January the birds, always most susceptible to alarm after nightfall, were roused from their slumber and began a most singular and insistent clamour. Pheasants, Blackbirds, all kinds, seemed to join in it, and this sudden outcry of scared birds was heard in places so far away from the Zeppelins' line of travel that the human ear would not catch the sound of the big engines at all.

Some unusual disturbance of the atmosphere appealed to the more delicate senses of the birds, though man's nerves were not finely enough tuned to respond to it. And now and then, in that firing line where they sing and play so fearlessly, the little friends of our soldiers, the Robins and the others, have to pay the penalty that is inseparable from sensibility too keenly set. It hardly ever happens that they are struck by bullet or shrapnel, but what does occur is that they come within the area of violent air vibration caused by a bursting shell and suffer death by the concussion.

Will old members who cannot attend the meeting on June 19, kindly drop me a postcard, and let me know if they still intend being members, as the business will be schedule for annual show, etc. We should like to arrange classes to suit the membership, but if we don't know what members we have we can't put on suitable classes. I have been successful in securing four new members, and I should like to see as many old members as possible. Anyone who would like to join kindly attend the meeting, or drop me a P.C., and I will put them right. Subs. 3s. 6d. per year, 1s. entrance for new members after this year.—R. Ward, 16, Wark Street.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting, June 14, Church Institute, Paddington Street. Mr. A. W. Curtis, chair, and 27 members present. A cheery letter was read from our member, Mr. F. Knight, describing his journey through North Wales, and members will be pleased to hear that he hopes to pay us a visit at the young bird show. Mr. P. Johnston was elected a member, and nominations were received from Mrs. Rolls and Mr. F. Day. The chairman presented medals to the winners of British bird judging competition, Mr. J. Chard taking 1st with 78 points; Offord, 2, 76; and Dossett, 3, 75. Hon. Sec. read list of specials presented for young bird show. A vote of thanks was unanimously accorded Mr. T. Pickard and Mr. A. Watcham for their generous subscription of £1 1s. each towards Crest cup. Mr. G. H. Thurley opened a discussion upon "Some points on bird breeding on which light is required." Several members joined in, and a very interesting and instructive debate took place. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Thurley was given for so carefully preparing his subject, and a vote of thanks to chairman closed the meeting.—F. Thynne, Assist. Hon. Sec.

TREDEGAR C.B.S.

Well-attended meeting, headquarters, June 5. Mr. D. Davis chair. New member elected, Mr. T. Morgan. Sec. submitted new rules for club competitions, and after a long discussion, same were adopted, and secretary instructed to supply each member with a copy. Decided to hold F.F. show at Tredegar Arms Hotel, July 3. Judge, Mr. G. Hale. Classification, 8 classes, similar to last year. Fee, 3d. per bird, points to count for unflighted cups. Schedules will be sent to all members when ready. I beg to invite the fanciers in Tredegar and district to become members of our society. The subscription is very low, only 2s. per annum, with 1s. entrance. We have a silver rose bowl for competition at the annual show, and 2 silver cups (1 champion, 1 novice), for competition at the young bird shows; last season every member who exhibited at the Nest Feather or unflighted shows, was presented with a special prize. I shall be pleased to supply full particulars to anyone desirous of becoming a member; send your 1s. on and take part in the first show. W. B. Watkins, Hon. Sec., 32a, Whitworth Terrace, Tredegar.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE C.B.S.

General meeting June 3, Shield's Cafe, Mr. R. Tindall chair. Mr. Maddison gave a paper on "Light Muling," and this was sent to CAGE BIRDS for publication in due course. The reading was listened to very attentively, and members who were not present missed one of the biggest treats the society has ever had. Mr. Maddison was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. We have secured the St. Wilfrid's Mission Hall, Blandford-street (off Westmorland-road) for N.F. show July 3. Subs. are now due, and must be paid before N.F. show to enable members to compete.—J. W. Reed, Sec.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Presentation to Mr. W. H. Stoakley, the Retiring Chairman.

Meeting, June 7, 6, Broadway, Mr. J. W. Heath, chair. Mr. Stoakley, retiring chairman, was presented with an illuminated address, the wording of which was as follows: "Wimbledon Cage Bird Society. The members desire to express to William Henry Stoakley, Esq., their heartiest thanks for the very valuable services he has rendered as their chairman since the formation of the society, and attribute its success in a large measure to his able and untiring efforts. The members, whilst regretting his retirement from the chair, trust that he may long be spared to associate himself with the interests of the society."

After usual business was over, the Chairman called upon President Mr. F. Piper to make the presentation. The popular President, upon rising, was well received. He said he had particular pleasure in being with them that evening for the purpose of making the presentation of an illuminated address to Mr. Stoakley, who had filled the post of chairman of the society for a period of ten years. During that time he had been a regular attendant at their meetings, given great attention, counsel and willing guidance to all, and had been ever ready to help them in another way which he need not mention. Although they were all confident that they had a worthy present chairman in the person of Mr. J. W. Heath, they felt that a man who had done so much for the interest of the Wimbledon Society as their retiring chairman was a difficult one to follow. He knew that Mr. Stoakley was unable to give the time to continue the office but he was sure he would be still with them in spirit. Wimbledon had much to thank Mr. Stoakley for, apart from the cage bird hobby. He was associated with all the good things going for the benefit of others, and no man in the district was doing more for our soldiers at the Front.

Upon rising to reply to the presentation, Mr. Stoakley was received with cheers. He thanked the President, members, and friends for the honour conferred upon him that evening, and he assured them he would treasure their gift as a token of their regard and appreciation. His work as their chairman had been one of considerable pleasure; it had been simple and easy, because the officials and members, one and all, had assisted him in his efforts to make the Wimbledon Cage Bird Society the success it had been. He was truly sorry to leave the chairmanship, but unfortunately was compelled by business pressure to do so. He wished the society every success in the future, and heartily thanked them for their extreme kindness.

A silver collection was then made in aid of the fund to supply comforts for the wounded of the East Surrey Regiment, and 25s. was collected. Upon receiving the amount from the chairman, Mr. Stoakley gave a short account of the work done, from which we gathered that he and his friends had got together some £700 for the purpose of comforts which had been highly appreciated by the men of the Regiment.

During the evening there was a judging competition among the members, the 34 birds staged being young ones of the year. 25 Yorks., 5 Norwich, and 4 Borders were staged, and among them were some excellent specimens. Mr. H. Norman acted as final judge. His awards were: Yorks: 1, hc, Smith; 2, Heath; 3, Whiting; vhc, Mrs. Farley; c, Bailey. Nor.: 1, 2, vhc, Nash; 3, hc, Birch. Bord.: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Pegg. Fifteen competitors took part in the judging contest. Result: Farley 22, Alexander 20, Snow 16, Birch and Holden 14 each, Mrs. L. Holden 13, Harris 12, Stevens 9, Mrs. Griffiths 8, Whiting and Nash 6 each, Dyke 5. Schedule for young bird show in July drafted, and with some small alteration duly passed. Decided to defer decision as to the form of the annual show till Oct. meeting. Although members generally have not had a particularly good season so far, the quality of the young ones, from what we could hear, seems to be quite high class.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE C.B.A.

Annual ramble, June 6, when an enjoyable day was spent by members and friends in the Newick District, Marstakes Common, etc. We arrived at Barcombe just after 9 and were soon in country lanes. Nature's choirmen were in splendid voice, Messrs. Blackbird and Thrush taking the leading parts. Chaffinches, Greenfinches, Goldfinches and Linnets also rendered good service, while the Cuckoo was not to be left behind. Many nests were found, including Linnets, Bullfinches, Chaffinches, Blackbirds, Thrushes, Wood Pigeons, Robins and others, some with eggs, others with young, also a young Cuckoo in a Linnet's nest. Good work was put in by some of the more vigorous members who climbed trees for special finds or otherwise. After a line time in the woods and common we walked back to Barcombe Mills, where we took train to Brighton. Several snaps were taken, which it is hoped will turn out successful as a pleasant reminder of an enjoyable day.—W. H. Gibb, Hon. Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Second annual ramble in the New Forest, June 9. A much smaller company than last year attended, "Kaiser Bill" being chiefly responsible for the shortage; but many birds were on show which would have done credit to a much larger gathering. The energetic Hon. Sec., Mr. W. L. Page, was early at the station to greet all comers, assisted by his ever-charming partner and little daughter.

A very large proportion of ladies were present, and a grand opportunity these outings give the ladies to compare notes on birdy matters; Mater tells how she has to prepare the egg-food and attend to the feeding, whilst Sonnie takes all the credit, and Wifie bewails seed shucks on the drawing-room carpet and the commandeering of jam-dishes, etc. The train journey was soon made, the first birds being sighted on the way—a group of "Mudlarks" on the shore. On arrival at Lyndhurst Road the party broke up into groups, some of whom wandered to the nearest trees and enjoyed the coolness, others went further afield; and many were the adventures recited later, strange and varied the birds and nests seen. When CAGE BIRDS becomes a magazine of fiction the stories may be published. However, the ladies who fought the snake brought its body in proof of their story. At the appointed hour the whole party met at Nichol's Temperance Hotel, and seated at a long table on the lawn with the genial chairman, Mr. W. G. Fellows at the head, they enjoyed a good tea. Everyone being filled, the Chairman spoke a few words of welcome to the friends present, and proposed a vote of thanks to the Hon. Sec. for his efforts in the arrangement and carrying out of the outing. Mr. Page returned thanks and proposed vote of thanks to Mr. S. White, who had done a lot of work in arranging for the catering. After thanks to the ladies, whose presence had added so much to the pleasure, a cricket match was played by teams chiefly composed of crocks, with ladies to make up the numbers, and fine cricketers some of the fair ones made. Mr. Melhuish made the highest score. A move was made to the station all too soon; on the return journey some alarm was caused to the passengers by a weird noise which brought a thought of Zeppelins to all minds, but which turned out to be the musical portion of the company "singing" "Auld Lang Syne." On arrival at Southampton hearty "good nights" brought an end to a thoroughly enjoyed ramble.—G. J. Slade, Assist. Sec.

LOCHGELLY C.B.S.

Annual ramble June 7 to Blairadam estate, by the kind permission of Sir Charles Adam. The party assembled at the cross, taking car for Kelty; upon arrival there we proceeded to Craig's Lodge, where we were met by P.C. Drummond, ranger, under whose guidance we were soon introduced to wild bird life in all its glories. The hedges, shrubs, and trees of the many splendid avenues were at their best, dressed in their new coats of varying shades of green, and the birds flitting from tree to tree. The honour of first find fell to Mr. A. Strachan, a Blackbird's nest and three eggs; further up the avenue we came across some newly felled trees, which, we were informed, had been planted in the year 1745. When some of them were measured they were found to be 4ft. thick. In a sheltered pond by the side of his house, Mr. Drummond showed us a Waterhen's nest upon the branch of a tree, and containing eight eggs; when we saw it, it would be at least 2ft. above the water. A few feet away a Wild Duck was sitting on a nest of eggs, and refused to be disturbed by our presence; her partner was swimming about on the pond, and came to the side when called by the ranger to be fed. Three lovely Shield-ducks were also swimming about displaying their beautiful colours for our admiration. We were treated to an exhibition of man-tracking by a magnificent blood-hound, the property of Mr. Drummond, and trained by himself, Mr. A. Strachan doing the part of the hunted man. He dropped his handkerchief on the drive, crossed a field, and hid in some shrubs; the hound smelt the handkerchief, picked up the trail, sounded his deep note, and went straight to his quarry. R. Stewart found a Willow Wren's nest and six eggs in a tuft of grass, while some lovely Pheasants were flushed on our way. We now entered the glen, and the nests of various species were found by M. Smith, J. McLeod, J. Adamson, A. Kirk, and G. Raith. After leaving the glen, W. Grewar found a Jenny Wren's nest, with eggs commencing to hatch. We proceeded to Lochgelly water supply, and after a thorough inspection of the various workings, we resumed our walk. R. Adamson found a Meadow Pipit's and four young. Crossing some moors, through woods, up hill and down dale, we reached the summit of Flockhouse Hill, or, to give it its local name, Cowden Hill. Here we had presented to us a view to which no artist's brush could do justice. Away in the background stand the Ochil Hills, on the right Benarty Hill, east and west Lomond; in the centre Loch Leven, the islands of which were to be seen quite distinctly. Queen Mary's Castle showed up well. After feasting our eyes on this magnificent scene we retraced our steps by way of the home of Sir Charles, along the beautiful drives, to Kelty, where tea was waiting, and to which full justice was done, arriving in Lochgelly about 7 o'clock, after having again been fortunate in the matter of weather. The ramble was voted by all to have been one of the best outings yet held.—W. Grewar, Assist. Sec.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

C. L.—Replied to by post.

SORE FEET (T. McC.).—See that the bird has perches of a proper size and shape, which are fixed securely in place, and especially that they are made of a nice soft pine wood. A round spar trimmed off on the top surface to an oval shape, and of such a thickness that the bird's claws do not quite meet when it grips it is about the correct thing. Catch the bird and bathe the feet for a few minutes morning and evening with a lukewarm solution of Wych Hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract to a saucerful of warm water. After bathing, dry gently and anoint the feet all over with Lanocyllin ointment, but do not leave on any surplus grease to collect the dirt. Continue this treatment for a week, or more if necessary. You may add 12 drops of Fluid Magnesia to the drinking water for three consecutive days to cool the blood.

YOUNG DYING (Miss Monkton).—Sorry, but I really cannot tell what is the cause of the young dying at ten days old without more detailed particulars to found an opinion upon. Did you leave the cocks with the hens whilst sitting and rearing the young; did the hens cease to feed them; and did they show any signs of wanting to start nesting again? The replies to all these questions materially affect the question. If you allowed the cocks to remain with the hens continuously before, remove them with the next round as soon as the hens begin to sit, and leave them to hatch out and rear the young by themselves, which they will do just as well, or even better, than when the cocks are left with them. The best advice I can give you in the circumstances is to get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager will send you for 7d., post free, and follow advice therein in future, and if anything goes wrong, or there is any point you do not understand, write at once and give the fullest particulars you can, which may help to form a clue to the trouble. You might also look up the replies on this subject which have appeared in the last few weeks, notably one to "E. C. Briggs" in last issue, and many others which practically cover the ground completely.

BALD BEHIND (S. O. S.).—Allow me to refer you to replies to "C. P." and "T. B.," in last issue, which fully cover your case, and you may act upon the advice in those replies with full confidence.

SWEATING HEN (W. G. S.).—The most rational treatment for a so-called sweating hen, if the young are of any exceptional value, is to transfer them at once to a foster hen to be reared, and then run the hen in a flight for a little while before she attempts nesting again, and during this interval give a plain seed diet, with a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every third day, and give a free supply of seedy chickweed or flowering tips of young groundsel. In the drinking water add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea and ten drops of lemon juice every second day for a week, and afterwards five drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. If you cannot transfer the young, offer her a variety of foods to tempt her to go on feeding the young, even if it is only in a half-hearted way, for a few days, until the illness passes off, when she will go on feeding as usual. See that the egg-food is quite fresh at least twice a day; offer a little soaked summer rape in a separate saucer daily, but see that it is not allowed to become sour; a teaspoonful of cracked hemp may also be given daily; and give a rather free supply of tempting green food, particularly crisp young lettuce, the flowering tips of young groundsel and seedy chickweed, in the order named. Add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea and ten drops of lemon juice to the drinking water for one half of each day, whilst the trouble lasts, and offer a bath in which you have dissolved sufficient common salt to make the water taste faintly saline.

MRS. A. M. WALKER.—Letter to hand. Many thanks.

MAKES CLUCKING NOISE (E. J. A.). The bird appears to be suffering from bronchial catarrh, doubtless due to exposure to direct draughts or extreme and rapid changes of temperature. See that it is kept free from these exciting causes; do not hang it in such a place as a window, nor high up near the ceiling, or a burning light in the evening. In additional to its usual seed diet give every second day for a fortnight a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on alternate days add five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine and sweet spirit of nitre to the drinking water. If not quite well at the end of that time stop the drugs for a week, and then resume them with the addition of five drops of tincture of lobelia for another fortnight.

TURNING BLACK (H. George).—I am not quite clear as to what you mean by the birds turning black. Is it the colour of the feathers that is changing, or merely the plumage that is becoming grimy with accumulated dirt? If the latter, nothing will quite remedy it, save hand-washing, until the moult, which is not so very far off now. If the colour of the feathers is really changing, it is doubtless due to melanism, resulting from an abnormal condition generally. For this I can give no satisfactory advice without some particulars to work on, of which you give none whatever. Three times a week give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and on each of the remaining days a fairly liberal supply of green food in variety. In the drinking water add 12 drops of Fluid Magnesia every second day for a fortnight or so. Then if you have not discovered a satisfactory treatment from the book which has been sent you, please write again, and give the fullest particulars you can of your feeding and general treatment hitherto, and of any definite symptoms shown by the birds.

CLEAR EGGS (Joe).—If the nine-year-old cock is in good health and active he is not necessarily the sole cause of the unfertile eggs, and it may be quite worth while trying him again. At the same time, if he is not in quite vigorous condition or you are particularly desirous of getting a brood of young this season with tolerable certainty, you would certainly do well to replace him with a younger bird in good health and song for the next attempt.

DEFECTIVE HIND CLAW (R. W. Hill).—Place a small rubber ring over the toes and shank for a fortnight or so. To make it, cut rather less than an eighth of an inch off the end of rubber tubing, such as is used on babies' feeding bottles, then catch the bird and holding the three fore toes close together, place the ring over them and pass it on upwards, holding the hind toe back against the shank, until the ring is nearly to the end of the hind toe; then leave it in that position, so that when you release the bird the ring will hold the hind toe backwards. After putting on both rings return the bird to its cage and let it wear them for the time named. At the end of a fortnight or so remove the rings and put in the cage thin and nearly-round perches, about the size and shape of an ordinary lead pencil, and leave these to complete the cure. You may have to keep these special perches in several weeks before the defect is corrected and the toes quite strong.

EGG SUBSTITUTE AND DIARRHŒA (Spongebun).—(1) I see no reason why the cake of which you send recipe should not answer very well as an occasional treat for the birds instead of egg food out of the breeding season, but to use it as a complete substitute for the orthodox egg food to rearing young, I think you would be well advised to double the number of eggs and use only half the quantity of baking powder. It may not be absolutely necessary to thus increase the proportion of eggs, but it is certainly advisable, unless you were going to use it for experiment, or for common stock. (2) To correct the looseness, limit or withhold according to the exigencies of the case the supply of succulent green food for a few days, and give daily a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts good sound hemp and crushed arrowroot biscuit, given dry. A pinch of maw may be added as an extra inducement to the birds to eat it freely. If this is not quite successful in two or three days, give in addition a morsel of bread and milk, well drained, and well sprinkled with carbonate of bismuth, and add to the drinking water five drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of opium for a day or two.

YORKSHIRE COCK WHEEZY (J. F. P., Leyton).—(1) The Yorkshire is perhaps a little overfed, which tends to aggravate the symptoms. If you take due care to see that it is not exposed to exciting causes of cold, the following treatment will doubtless put matters right in the course of a week or so. Give a mixture of three parts canary to one part rape as staple. In the water add, every second day for a week, six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and after this give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it every second day for a week, and on the alternate days add to the water five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre. (2) Yes, the specimen enclosed is shepherd's purse.

STRANGE BEHAVIOUR (Perplexed).—It is nervousness, pure and simple, which caused the bird to behave as you describe. As this behaviour has only began in the last few months, you should consider whether you have introduced anything of an alarming nature to the bird into the household, which is conspicuous at the time it is taken down for cage cleaning, etc., such, for example, as a cat or dog, or even an inanimate object. The removal of any such exciting cause if discovered will suffice to remove the effect. If no such cause is found, then the bird is probably more or less run down and consequently more a victim of "stage fright." The only thing you can do is to endeavour to gain its confidence by constant attention, and a gentle, methodical manner, and frequently offering it a morsel of some tempting green food. Let it find out that you mean it no harm, but do not try to force your attention upon it all at once. Rather try to draw its attention to you as a provider of good things whose favour is to be courted rather than feared.

NOT BREEDING (P. Smith).—Assuming you are sure of the sex of your birds, I am afraid I cannot tell you why they have not shown any signs of breeding, although apparently in good health, beyond the fact that they are not in proper breeding condition. You appear to have mated the birds you bred two years ago among themselves, which must mean that you have brothers and sisters mated. If I am right, this is not a good thing, as the breeding is much too close when there is apparently no object whatever for it. But still, this would not account for the birds not settling down to breed. What I would advise you to do is to dispose of one-half of the birds you have, and get an equal number of fresh ones to take their place as mates for those kept. Get strong, vigorous birds—hens untried, if possible, and cocks in good song—and 1914 bred for preference. Mate these with your own stock, and in addition to the staple seed diet give each pair a small teaspoonful of egg food with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it every second day for two or three weeks, or stop it earlier if the hens go to nest. On the alternate days give a liberal supply of dandelion seed heads, or young stools of the whole plant, cut off just below the surface of the ground, and given altogether—crown, leaves, blooms, and seed heads. You may add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and ten drops of lemon juice to the water for four consecutive days, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel every second day for a week.

REJECTED EGG (Coggeshall).—I cannot tell you why the hen persists in sitting with one egg exposed outside her wing. It may simply be an idiosyncrasy, though if the same egg is always rejected the chances are all in favour of it being unfertile, or one with the contents dried up in the shell. It would be easy to tell if it were always the same egg that is exposed if you were to place a small distinctive mark upon it. Even if it is not always the same, it would be the wisest course to allow the clutch to incubate the full time before rejecting them. There is nothing you can do to make the hen keep all eggs covered if she elects not to do so, especially when it is not a case of having more than she can conveniently cover.

NIBBLING FEATHERS (I. H. Brown).—The bird probably needs occupation more than anything else. For green food give a half-ripe plantain stalk or seed head of shepherd's purse to pick at each day. A piece of cuttlefish stuck in the wires for him to peck at would also be useful, and a small cube of hard common salt ditto. If available, also give every morning and evening for a time a mealworm, with the head crushed, fastened on to the end of a perch. If this does not stop him plucking out and chewing his feathers, give a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and then sprinkled with soft sugar every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice. Allow it to bathe as freely as it likes as long as the weather is fine and warm.

VARIED (R.T.).—(1) Yes, it is certainly right to give green food to birds bringing up young. From about the fourth day onward it should be regarded as a necessity, as it not only assists the hens in their feeding duties, but keeps the digestive organs in a good healthy condition. You do not say what kind of green food you gave, nor how old the young were. The young dying after was probably a mere coincidence. (2) Yes, if the cock is wanted for any other purpose it is quite correct to remove him as soon as the hen begins to sit, and leave her to hatch out and rear the young by herself. (3) For short description of feeding young see replies to "F.G.T." and "Bewildered" in last issue, or for full details you should get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners." (4) The food you name has been used by many for rearing young with success. (5) Certainly it is not usual to lose the young when two weeks old, though they may be lost at any age from various causes. You should have given particulars about these losses, and whether the hens were wanting to go to nest again. Perhaps the replies referred to will enlighten you. If not, and you will write again, I shall be glad to help you as far as possible. (6) No, canary seed is not German rape. They are two entirely different seeds. Canary seed is somewhat similar in shape to barley, about a third the size and of straw colour. German rape belongs to the brassicæ, or cabbage tribe, and is reddish-brown in colour and somewhat similar to cabbage or turnip seed in appearance.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

ARE THE EGGS FERTILE? (Norwich Nest).—I would advise you to let the hen sit upon the eggs, as although the birds quarrel, the fact of their both being in breeding condition gives you a good chance of the eggs being fertile. The fact of your not seeing them pair is nothing to go by, as this may, and probably does, take place at dawn, when you are enjoying your beauty sleep. Even such domesticated birds as pairs of Canaries frequently quarrel terribly, yet the eggs prove fertile. If you have another hen to spare, you could run the Goldie with her, while the first hen is sitting. Anyway, whatever you do, shut the cock away from the hen; he will be of no use with her until the young are reared. (2) There is still time for Canary-Bullfie hybrids. Feed on plenty of seeding wild food, gathering it carefully, so as to retain any insects lurking among it.

FEEDING BRITISH BIRDS (Old Birds). — Make the following mixture for your Linnet:—Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, rape 2 parts; this will be his stock food during the summer, and in the autumn a little linseed could be added to it and continued during the winter. Buy a packet of good wild seed mixture and give a spoonful twice a week. Gather shepherd's purse, chickweed, groundsel, and seeding grass, and give fresh daily, or as frequently as you are able to get it. For the proper treatment of Thrush and Lark you should get our Nutshell booklets on these birds, post free, 2½d., from this office. Crushed puppy biscuits (best quality), soaked in hot water or gravy, with an occasional feed of insectile food, will keep a Thrush or Lark in good condition. The insectile mixture should be made slightly moist by mixing scraped raw carrot, boiled potatoes, or chopped green food with it; they should both have a few insects occasionally, and the Thrush a fairly liberal supply of soft ripe fruit. Give the Lark a few shelled oats and canary and maw seed, he will occasionally eat a few of these.

REARING LARKS UNDER CANARIES (Mermaid). —I fancy you are trying to break the record. I have never heard of Canaries rearing young Larks, but if you intend to try, keep the hen well supplied with egg food, and bread and milk, made by pouring hot milk on dry old bread. Mix with the egg food a spoonful of good ants' eggs, which should also be dipped in the milk. If you can manage to get a few fresh ants' eggs, you might manage to hand-feed the young ones with these, also giving green fly, and, as they grow older, small caterpillars or pieces of mealworms. Be sparing with seed for the old birds; in fact, I would only let them have it at intervals the first few days, and then either after they have fed the young or the very last feed at night, when they have packed the babies to bed. I think your only chance of success is in assisting the old birds by giving each food as they would not use themselves. (2) You need not place the young birds outdoors until they are removed from the foster parents and are well able to feed themselves.

BULLFINCH IN PAIN (Bob).—If the trouble with your Bullfinch is what you suggest, I do not think there would be the two extremes of pain and ease. I am rather inclined to attribute the trouble to acute indigestion, and would suggest treatment for that complaint. Give first of all an aperient of Glauber Salts, as much as will cover a sixpence, dissolved in two tablespoonsful of water, and repeat the dose a couple of days later. If he will eat soft food, dip a cube of day-old bread in hot milk and dust over it just a little powdered bismuth. Soak rape and canary seed, and give a spoonful daily, and twice a week a spoonful of wild seed mixture, which you can purchase at most corn dealers. I notice you do not use sunflower seed. This is excellent food for Bullfinches. A few grains can be given daily. Your green food should include seeding grass; soft fruit is also much appreciated. You would do well to procure our Nutshell booklet on the Bullfinch, 2½d. post free.

FINCHES MOPY (G. E. B.).—There is evidently something quite wrong with your treatment. You should have told me how you were feeding your Finches, as I suspect that is the cause. I would advise you to get our booklets on these birds; they will help you considerably. In the meantime give both birds a dose of Glauber Salts. Dissolve as much as will cover a sixpence in two tablespoonsful of water, and repeat the dose two days later. Feed the Goldfinch on the following: Teazle 4 parts, canary 3 parts, hemp 2 parts, summer rape, ¼ part; and twice a week give a spoonful of wild seed mixture, and a few sunflower seeds daily. Seed for the Linnet should be as follows: Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, summer rape 2 parts. Let him have the wild seed mixture the same as the Goldie. Both birds should have an abundance of seeding wild food, such as groundsel, shepherd's purse, sow thistle, chickweed, grass, etc. Keep in a good large cage and let them bath daily. If you follow the directions given in the Nutshell booklets you should have no trouble to keep your birds in good health at this time of the year, when natural food is plentiful.

MORE BULLFINCH TROUBLES (W. H. Kemp).—Your trouble arises from improper treatment. Get our Nutshell booklet on the Bullfinch and treat as advised. Give the bird an aperient of Epsom or Glauber salts and keep him well supplied with wild food. Read the advice given to "Bob" and others in this issue. By the account you gave of your birds, it appears to me that they are probably too fat; if so, the salts will give them relief, and if it is followed by proper feeding, he should keep in good health.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

CARDINAL WITH BARE STOMACH (W.D.).—Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every other day for a week, then every fourth day for a month. Lightly anoint the bare area with a little cold cream; you must only use a little, not sufficient to run among and grease the plumage. Diet: Canary and white millet seeds in equal parts, also a few hemp and sunflower seeds; ripe fruit, greenfood, and a few live insects. Till the present condition passes, give it a little milk sop daily, about a dessert-spoonful, made with condensed milk, boiling water, and a little sponge cake. As regards live insects, you can offer spiders, earwigs, smooth caterpillars, beetles, and the like, also live ants' eggs, and well scoured maggots. If you have no garden and cannot secure any of these, then you must fall back on three or four mealworms per diem. Supply a daily bath, and also keep up a continuous supply of grit and cuttlebone in the cage. It can have any kind of fruit it will eat. English and foreign banana and sweet apple, and overripe pear (when in season) are much liked by most individuals. You had better report progress in two or three weeks' time. A lily round the room daily, if this can be arranged, would also greatly benefit it.

CONVERTING GREENHOUSE TO AVIARY (Jacob).—It is unfortunate that you do not show position of door on diagram. You must arrange a small lobby of wire netting either inside or out, so that you can have free ingress and egress without the birds escaping. Excepting the ventilator, the whole of the roof must be covered with roofing felt. This will modify extreme heat in summer and cold in winter. The whole of the front and end glass must be covered with wire netting on the inside. The netting covering the gaps of the windows should have hinged flaps, large enough to take out and attend to the food vessels without going inside. The food and water vessels can easily be arranged on a small shelf fixed inside the whole width of these openings. The back wall and two ends of the aviary should be thickly covered with twiggy branches, the front portion of the aviary being left open for flight. On the back wall, amid the branches, must be hung (some can be suspended from the roof) cocoanut husks or small barrels (the latter for preference), at least double as many as you have pairs of birds. Window marked No. 1 on your diagram will only require to be opened for attendance purposes; you will ventilate by window No. 2 and the roof ventilator. You would have space for say 3 pairs Budgerigars, 1 pair Lovebirds, and 1 pair Cockatiels, or similar sized Parrakeets. For other details and general treatment, see our Budgerigar Nutshell, 2½d. post free.

PARRAKEET VOMITING (E.S.).—I do not think there is any serious trouble with your bird. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intervening days put half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in the water. Do not give any more bread sopped in milk, but to obviate it missing the moistened bread, lightly moisten a crust of bread or piece of biscuit with a mixture of syrup of phosphates and water. Supply the following seed mixture: One quart giant canary seed, one pint each hemp, oats, and sunflower seed, and half a pint of shelled pea nuts, well mix and keep a constant supply in cage. Also supply any kind of ripe fruit it will eat, according to season; give it some greenfood to pick over—lettuce, flowering and seeding grass, groundsel, chickweed, etc. Cuttlebone and grit must be continually in the cage, also a piece of a thickish branch of a tree for it to exercise its mandibles upon. It is a Ring-necked Parrakeet.

You can give at intervals, to vary the ordinary diet a little, pieces of biscuit, plain cake, and a few shelled walnuts. You had better carry out above treatment for a month or more, and then report progress. In case of development of any further adverse symptoms you should write again at once.

BUDGERIGARS NOT BREEDING (Perplexed).—It is largely the case of the time an individual pair take to settle down. The husks are fixed up correctly, and your birds are sooner or later sure to settle down. I am afraid, though your cage looks a large one, by the time you had fixed up another two husks its dimensions would be considerably reduced, and I favour an extra cage, so placed that each pair of birds will be in full view of each other. There is another alternative, and that is, to fix up a corner of your bird room as a flight, a piece about 4ft. long and from 2 to 2½ft. deep, the full height of the room, would make nice quarters for 2 or 3 pairs, and you should have some decent luck with them. Use only twiggy branches for perching accommodation. You must decide which is the plan you can best carry out. If you decide on the extra cage, and your birds arrive before it is ready, put the new arrivals into the cage with your present pair, and see how they behave; do not put in any extra husks. If they (both pairs) should go to nest then leave them together till the young of one pair are almost ready to fend for themselves, then remove one family party to the other cage. It would be wise to ring your breeding pairs.

AMAZON PARROT WITH TREMBLING FITS (Pollie).—I do not think there is much wrong with your bird. All birds are nervous in fresh quarters, but it ought to begin to learn to steady down now; also, it ought to become gradually accustomed to the dog. Certainly put it out on warm days, not in an exposed position though, nor where it will be in a current of wind. Avoid hasty movements in its vicinity, and see that all who attend to its wants are gentle and quiet while performing this duty, and the nervousness will gradually disappear. As it is talking a little, when it settles down it will not only begin to repeat any words it has already learnt, but pick up other words, sounds, and calls which it hears. You can also repeat to it again and again things you would like it to say. It should ultimately end by barking like a dog, and also calling the dog by the name it hears you call it by, and so on. As it is moulting, one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water once a week will be beneficial; also, half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates twice a week, during the period of the moult.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Miss M. Stainland.—Hen Rosella died of splenic apoplexy, not septic fever, but septicæmia, a condition in which the germ lives and propagates in the blood stream.

W. G. Sanders.—Necrosis of the lungs, brought about by the action of the bacillus of necrosis, causing local death of structures in its vicinity. It was not of recent occurrence, and the bird was very thin.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

F. Pitts.—We endeavour to make every item interesting to some reader or other, and our choice as to what shall or shall not be published is controlled only by this desire.

R. Smith.—Articles such as you mention have frequently appeared in our columns. The special article, "The Bird-keeper's Year," published in our 1915 Annual, gives all the particulars about which you enquire, and the very complete work, "Canary Breeding," also published by us, goes much more fully into the matter than would be possible in any article.

Mr. Hugh M. Ferguson, Sec. of Irvine C.B.S., has removed from "Golffields," Irvine, to Victoria Cottage, Hawkhill Road, Ayr.

The Cage Birds watch I had from you on Nov. 10, 1912, writes T. R. Wallace, Falkirk, still keeps excellent time. I should advise any fancier to buy one.

Mr. H. Craven, Plymouth, writes that he won 1st and spl. in the Yellow Variegated Yorks class at the Royal Cornwall Show, not Peters, as in our report.

Mr. E. Hibbert, hon. sec. Walkden Roller Society, writes that the open contest of the society has been fixed for Jan. 15 next. and the members' contest Dec. 4.

The Young Bird show of the City and Suburban A.C.B. will be held on July 5 at the Church Institute, Paddington Street, with 52 classes. The judges will be Mr. H. Norman and Mr. J. Robson.

Owing to our late sec., Mr. J. S. Jones, leaving the district, writes Mr. J. H. Bevan, 172, High Street, Cymmer, Porth, I have undertaken the duties of Sec. to the Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Yorks and Lancs British Bird and M.C. in Yorks and Lancs should apply as early as possible to Mr. T. H. Inman, hon. sec., 43, Derby Road, Thornbury, Bradford.

Will fanciers of Bradford and district please note the next meeting-place of the Bradford National Show Committee will be the Cinderella Club Rooms, Lee Street, near the end of Thornton Road, writes Mr. S. Midgley, Hon. Sec.

The many friends of W. Vardy, the well-known judge and exhibitor of Norwich, writes Mr. E. Fox, Long Eaton, will be sorry to hear that he is now lying in Nottingham Hospital, having undergone a serious operation. This, however, has saved his life, and he is progressing as well as can be expected

I write to thank you for the splendid drawing of my buff Cinnamon Norwich cock "Pride of Suffolk," on last week's front page; it is one of the most lifelike pictures I have ever seen, and great credit is due to Mr. Norman. My town is Ipswich, however, not Norwich as printed. Wishing Cage Birds every success.—J. Bevan, Ipswich.

We have received a sample of the XL Red Feed being sold this season by Mr. W. Errington of Four Lane Ends, Bradford. It is nicely ground, is free from husk, etc. (i.e. comprises only the actual colour-producing parts of the fruit) and retains just the right percentage of its natural oil, while its colour is rich and brilliant. Fanciers using colour-food will do well to consider the claims of the XL Red Feed

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. G. Marlin, that I have to inform fanciers that the Sec. of the Hamilton Cadzow Oak O.S., Pte. Wm. Hamilton, 6th Scottish Rifles, has been wounded in action, receiving wounds in the right shoulder and left foot, and is lying in hospital in Boulogne. I am sure that the members of the B.F.C.C. and of above society will join with me in wishing our esteemed friend a speedy and complete recovery.

"Bird Notes" for July, the journal of the Foreign Bird Club, opens with some interesting notes on the Indian Brown-backed Robin, contributed by Mr. H. Whistler, Dr. Lovell-Keays, and Lieut. W. A. Bainbridge; these are illustrated by a coloured plate depicting a pair of these beautiful birds. Other features are: "Nesting Results for 1914," by Dr. Lovell-Keays; "Failures and their Lessons," by Mr. W. Shore-Baily; "My Little Owls," by the Marquis of Tavistock; and "Toucans and Toucanettes," by Mr. F. Dawson-Smith.

Ramsden's Pure Peppers are ground from garden cultivated pods of the current season's growth. They are stored in hermetically sealed canisters, thus retaining their beautiful colour and aroma. They are sold packed in tins only, with a full guarantee under the "Food and Drugs" and "Merchandise" Acts. There are no peppers on the market to equal Ramsden's in producing beauty of colour and quality of plumage. Owing to the delays both on rail and by post customers should order at least a week in advance. J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, S.W.—Advt.

On Breeding Birds worth Keeping.

Cage-bird breeding was something like a gamble in the days before breeding was conducted on scientific lines, and when selecting, mating and pairing received no such intelligent attention as they do to-day. But more and more it is being realised that, heredity being studied, breeding valuable cage birds becomes almost an exact science—at all events it becomes a hobby at which money can be made in an easy and pleasant manner. It is therefore worth while for every intelligent cage bird enthusiast who wishes to make himself a cage bird specialist to get the soundest standard work on the breeding and care of cage birds so far issued.

"Canaries, Hybrids and British Birds," the Waverley Book Company's publication, covers the whole ground of this fascinating subject, and we advise every birdman to send at once for the Waverley free pamphlet on "Canaries, Hybrids and British Birds," which explains the contents of this grand bird book, as also the very convenient terms on which it may be purchased. This attractive booklet will be sent by return to any reader who sends a postcard asking for it to the Waverley Book Company, Ltd., 7, 8, and 9, Old Bailey, London, E.C. The bird-keeper who owns and uses the Waverley publication will soon have mastered the art of breeding cage birds worth keeping, those that will do him credit at the shows.

Young Thrush as Foster Parent.

Private Haywood, Veterinary Hospital, British Expeditionary Force, France, writes to "Country Life" as follows:—"Out here in our clipping shed I took a young Thrush out of a nest, where it had apparently been left. It was very small. We reared it by feeding it from a stick, and a few days ago—well, just over a week—we had a nest of four young Blackbirds, so put them with the Thrush, and it has fed them continually ever since, till now they are out of the nest and doing well. It is a really good mother to them, just like an old bird. It also fed a young Chaffinch we had sent to the rear, till we think it must have choked it, as we found it this morning with food in its throat. It had been chirping beautifully. Have you heard of such a thing lately in England?"

Are You an Angler?

If you are an angler you will go straight to Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son's bookstall or to your newsagent and ask for the second number of the new Penny Angling Weekly—"Fishing."

The first number issued last week found much favour with Waltonians, and the second number is even better than that issue.

The menu provided by the Editor of this bright weekly includes:—Articles: "Is May-fly Fishing Sport?" "Two Men in a Boat"; "Rock-fishing on the Yorkshire Coast"; "Trouting Days and Trouting Ways." Features:—"Just Now in the Angling World" (by the Editor); "The Lure of the Fly"; "New Flies from Old Feathers"; "Tackle Talks"; "Answers to Queries"; "From Our Scrap Book"; "Piscatorial Pars"; "Angling Topics of the Moment"; "In the Briny"; "Doings of the Clubs," etc., etc.

"Fishing" is published (price one penny) on the Thursday of each week, and the subscription to the New Paper is 6s. one year; 3s. 3d. six months; and 1s. 8d. three months, post free. All communications should be sent to:—Editor, "Fishing," 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

MUSIC HATH CHARMS!

In an article, "The Thrush as Mimic," in "Country Life," Mr. W. H. Hudson says: "When Thrushes taken from the nest are reared in towns where they never hear the Thrush or any other bird sing, they are often exceedingly vocal, and utter a medley of sounds sometimes very distressing to the ear. I have heard many caged Thrushes of this kind in London, but the most remarkable instance I have met with was at the little seaside town of Seaford. Here in the main shopping street a caged Thrush lived for years in a butcher's shop, and poured out its song continuously, the most distressing Throstle performance I ever heard, composed of loud, shrill and harsh sounds—imitations of screams and shouts, boy whistlers, saw filing, knives sharpened on steels, and numerous other unclassifiable noises, but all more or less painful. The whole street was filled with the noise, and the owner used to boast that his Thrush was the most persistent as well as the loudest singer that had ever been heard. He had no nerves, and was proud of it!"

"The Blackbird, like the Thrush, sometimes borrows a note or a phrase, and, like the Thrush again, if reared by hand he may become a nuisance by mimicking some disagreeable sound and using it by way of song. I heard of such a case a short time ago at Sidmouth. The ground floor of the house where I lodged was occupied by a gentleman who had a fondness for bird music, and, being an invalid confined to his rooms, he kept a number of birds in cages. He had, besides Canaries, the Thrush, Chaffinch, Linnet, Goldfinch and Cirl Bunting. I remarked that he did not have the best singer of all—the Blackbird. He said that he had procured one, or that some friend had sent him one, a very beautiful Ouzel-cock in the blackest plumage and with the orange-tawniest bill, and he had anticipated great pleasure from hearing its fluting melody. But alas! no Blackbird song did this unnatural Blackbird sing. He had learnt to bark like a dog, and whenever the singing spirit took him he would bark once or twice or three times, and then, after an interval of silence of the proper length, about fifteen seconds, he would bark again, and so on until he had had his fill of music for the time. The barking got on the invalid's nerves, and he sent the bird away. 'It was either that,' he said, 'or losing my senses altogether.'"

Why, Certainly!

A correspondent to the "Millgate Monthly" says: "Thrushes and Blackbirds love the cherries, and every year get a share of the crop. I do not mind their raids, though I might adopt preventive measures if I depended on fruit growing for the market. All the same, I do not think we should be too severe on the birds. They can no more help stealing cherries than a cat can resist the temptation to catch a mouse when it sees one." The writer of "Wayside Walks and Talks," who quotes this extract from a letter received, says "This is a very sensible view to take of the subject." Probably he does not himself try to grow cherries.

SOME POPULAR BRITISH BIRDS

THE Goldie is rather a late breeder, often not commencing until the middle of May. It generally chooses the branch of an old apple tree, but often builds in the branches of the beech, horse-chestnut, pear, and poplar trees. The neat cup-shaped nest is composed of moss, lichen, and wool, and lined with horse-hair and soft feathers.

The young, if required for hand-rearing, should be taken when about 10 days old, and may be reared on the ordinary egg and biscuit food as given to young Canaries. I have never reared any myself; in fact, I seldom bother to hand-rear any kind of Finches excepting Bullies, for they are so easily procured and steadied that they are not worth the trouble of hand-rearing.

The Care of Freshly-Caught Birds.

Now we come to the Goldie in captivity. Fresh-caught birds need very careful treatment, for up till the time they are caught they have been living on succulent seeds and green-food, and when first caged they should have a plentiful supply of this, together with soaked teazel, rape, canary, and cracked hemp. They should also have a pot of the seed they are to be fed on, gradually reducing the soaked seed as you notice them eating the hard food. Inga is a most useful seed for fresh-caught Goldies, and they should have a liberal supply during the first fortnight of cage life, but it must be reduced as soon as possible, or it will cause trouble.

I find a very satisfactory diet is two parts teazel, one part hemp, one part canary, half-part rape, quarter-part linseed, and about one-eighth part inga. I also give a teaspoonful of wild seed mixture twice a week, and green-food of any kind in season, daily. I am no advocate of the plain canary seed diet, no doubt they can, and do live on it, but they must get very surfeited of it. I think that if we were doomed to live the rest of our lives on bread alone, we should soon hate the very sight of it. Not only that, but canary seed, being somewhat devoid of albuminoids and fats, we must use other seeds to make up this deficiency, and so we use hemp, linseed, rape, etc. Of course, during the summer the birds do not require such a stimulating diet, and through the warm weather I reduce the hemp to about half, and withdraw the linseed altogether, also the inga, just giving a pinch about once a week.

The exhibition Goldfinch should be as large as possible, with a good broad skull. The blaze must be large and square cut, extending as far as possible behind the eyes, and of a rich crimson colour, free from black markings, with the exception of a fine line round the base of the beak. Some birds have altogether too much black round the beak, which spoils the look of them; the black on the head should be deep and glossy, and free from white markings, which will keep any Finch out of competition; the back and breast must be a rich chestnut-brown; the wings must be well carried, the flights evenly buttoned to the tips, and the bars large and rich colour. Type, as in all Finches, should be Norwich, a thick-set, cobby bird generally scores over the "long lean 'uns." They should stand across the perch at an angle of 45 degrees.

The Best of All Pets.

The Bullfinch makes a charming exhibition bird, and is absolutely IT as a pet. He seems to be a special favourite among the ladies, his confiding ways and beautiful plumage apparently taking the eye. The Bullie may easily be taught to take a hemp or sunflower seed from the fingers or lips, or to come out of his cage for a fly round the room, and return to the cage.

About three years ago I had a Bullie, with which I could do almost anything, although he was only once house-moulted, so had not forgotten the "joys of freedom." He accidentally got out of his cage in the garden, and, after paying a visit to several of the neighbouring gardens, returned to his cage after about four hours' liberty. About a fortnight later it got out again, and after hopping about the honeysuckle and eating some of the berries, came back to the cage quite contented. After this I used to let him out regularly every week, usually on Sundays when I could be there, and he would always go in without any trouble, sometimes only staying out about half an hour.

One Sunday early in February I let him out as usual, but he stayed out until the Tuesday, so I did not let him out again until the end of September. After his spending the summer, as he had done, in an outdoor aviary, I was foolish to let him out, and I have not seen him since. I think if I had caged him up for a few weeks previous to letting him out, he would have come back.

The Bullfinch commences to nest about the end of April, and frequently rears two broods in the season. The favourite nesting site is on the horizontal branch of a yew tree, but I have often found the nest in a holly bush. It is rather a coarse structure, the outer framework consisting of fine twigs and coarse roots, and is lined with finer roots, dried grass, and a little horse-hair. The young are fed largely on insects, aphides and small green caterpillars, and Bullies, by destroying an enormous number of these pests in feeding their young, thoroughly compensate for the little damage done in the spring.

The Bullie, when first caged, often goes on hunger strike, but put him in a few privet berries or blackberries, and he will soon come round. Let him have soaked seed at first, as well as a supply of the stock mixture, also a good supply of cracked hemp seed. As soon as he is eating the dry seed I take away the hemp, only using it for taming purposes, and giving it as a tit-bit from the fingers.

The Bullie's Menu.

The stock mixture I use consists of one part canary, ½-part teazle, ¼-part summer rape, ¼-part sunflower, ¼-part linseed. I have never found them get too fat on this diet providing they have a good-sized stock cage. For green-food I give every day whatever is in season. Dandelion, groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's-purse, and common nettle (when seeding) are all relished. I also keep a mixture of gold of pleasure, maw, inga, and sesame, of which I give a teaspoonful once a week. Don't forget to give the Bullie an abundant supply of blackberries and privets, and fruit of any kind, for this is the best kind of colour-food the Bullfinch can have, and with a plentiful supply of such he will shine like a silk hat.

The exhibition Bullfinch should be of good size, and cobby in shape. The most important point is the breast colour, which must be carried well down, and must be very rich and bright. This counts 25 points. He should have a broad skull, with a glossy blue-black cap, coming well under the eye and forming a bib under the beak; and the neck should be short and well filled in, the back a beautiful blue-grey, and the light wing-bar clear and distinct. Rough thighs are a serious handicap to the Bullie, and many otherwise good birds are spoiled by this; the same with scissor wings.

We now come to the Greenfinch. Perched on the wild rose bush in the autumn or winter, feasting on the orange-coloured berries, he is really a picture. Very few British bird exhibitors are without this common Grosbeak, and he is a most useful bird to the Mule and Hybrid breeder. The Greenie is not at all particular where it places its nest, usually a thick hawthorn hedge, and sometimes in the branch of a yew or fir tree. It is rather a large, loosely constructed nest, composed of coarse roots and dried grass, lined with finer roots and moss.

The young are easily reared with egg-food and a little soaked rape, though I doubt if it is worth the trouble, for they can be purchased so cheaply and are easily steadied. Wild-caught birds breed freely with their own or other species. I have never experienced any difficulty with fresh-caught Greenies. I never use any soaked seed for them, but simply turn them into an outdoor aviary and put them a good supply of canary, teazle, rape and sunflower. I am a great believer in the last-named seed for Greenfinches and Bullfinches, and much prefer it to hemp for them. It is an oily seed, and puts on a nice polish, without creating excessive fat as hemp seed does.

When the Greenies have been in the aviary about a fortnight I cage them up and select the best of them, then let the rest fly. The stock mixture I give is 1 part Canary, ½-part teazel, ½-part rape, and ¼-part each of linseed and sunflower, with green-food ad lib. The show bird should be as large as possible, and rich and bright in colour. A broad head with a bold eye, thick-set, and well filled in neck. Chest broad, with a nice curve from the throat to vent. They must have plenty of yellow in the wings and tail. Yellows generally "head the list," but buffs are the bigger birds.

The Chaffinch is another beauty of the Finch family. Its nest is a most beautiful cup-shaped structure, composed of moss, wool, lichen and very fine grass, lined with horse-hair and soft feathers. Indeed the Chaffinch may well be called the feathered architect. The nest is usually placed in a tall hawthorn hedge or in the fork of a fruit tree.

When fresh caught, I put Chaffinches in a large flat cage about 2ft. x 18in. x 16in., with a cloth top—this prevents them doing much damage to themselves. Give them a plentiful supply of soaked seed, also a pot of the stock mixture they are to be fed on. Keep them fairly quiet for the first week or two, then the largest and best-coloured birds can be picked out and put into stock cages. I find they do well on a mixture of 2 part canary, 1 part teazel, ½-part rape, ¼-part linseed, ¼-part cracked sunflower, with a little insectivorous food, and occasionally a mealworm if they will take it.

The Chaffinch for show should be as large as possible, and wedge-shaped, with a good full chest of rich, ruddy colour. The cap must be a nice bright blue, and the wings must be carried perfectly even, and show plenty of white on the shoulders; the back a nice warm brown. Steadiness is a most important thing in a Chaffinch, and counts 30 points on the show bench. He is more like a Bunting to steady, but patience and perseverance generally do the trick. There are birds that cannot be steadied, and the best thing to do with such is to let them fly. I once kept a Bramblefinch for nearly two years, but it required the patience of Job to steady him. He dashed about like a fresh-caught bird when anyone approached him, and I finally let him go in disgust.

The Best Kind of Cage.

I think the most satisfactory stock cage for any British Finch is of the box pattern, 18in. x 12in. x 10in. This size cage will give plenty of exercise, and with an occasional run into a show will keep them in hand. I give them a bath every day, summer and winter. I moult them all in an outdoor aviary, give an abundance of wild seeds, fruit and berries, and also add a little more linseed to the stock mixture towards the end of the moult. When caged up again they are in grand form. Fresh air, plenty of natural food, and the bath are the things essential to condition. Above all, don't forget to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest CAGE BIRDS every week, and you will not go far wrong.

POINTS ON WHICH LIGHT IS WANTED.

A paper read by Mr. G. H. THURLEY (Tottenham), before the members of the City and Surburban A.C.B.

WHEN our worthy secretary asked me, on the occasion of my visit to him in the early part of the year, whether I was prepared to initiate any discussion on some birdy problem, I was at first inclined to beg to be let off, but when I thought of the many hours he ungrudgingly gives to the Association on our behalf, I decided that I should be very ungrateful if I did not try to do some little thing to help, hence my few notes this evening.

In making out these notes I have several objects in view, and these I hope will manifest themselves as I go along. First and foremost, I am hoping that at the conclusion of this short paper all Canary breeders in the room will unhesitatingly give their views, so that an interesting discussion may result, and I shall then feel amply compensated for my small individual effort.

Different Fanciers, Different Ideas.

Some six or seven years ago, when I started bird breeding, I read everything I could come across, asked innumerable questions of every fancier I met, and tried in every way possible to get hold of all available information. But as I proceeded with this policy I found that the ideas of different men on the same subject were as widely different as the men themselves. In fact, it seems to me that on many of the principles which should underlie bird breeding we are hopelessly ignorant. We are far too content to go on year after year, quite satisfied if we get a good average of youngsters, reared without any attempt to try and discover what laws, if any, govern our results.

I am well aware that the Canary is looked upon as a sport; a lecturer said the same in this room only a short time ago. But this, I take it, only referred to the type. A Canary has always been a bird; this is self-evident, for we certainly do not go to the nest-pan and find that the eggs have produced reptiles or anything of that order. The sportive tendency, therefore, must show itself in other directions, and one of the most prominent, perhaps, is colour. Many of our finest types of florists' flowers have originated as sports, but by careful selection these sports have become absolutely fixed, so that at least 50 per cent. come true to type from seed.

In Pursuit of the Yellows.

The same result, however, is not attained in Canary breeding, and I am strongly of the opinion that this is due very largely to carelessness in the selection of our breeding birds. By carelessness I mean want of thought for everything except as viewed from the exhibition standpoint. One of the first points that I met with both in books and in Canary articles was that the cock influences the colour and the hen the type of the youngsters. Well, like most beginners, I was very anxious to breed some good yellows. Accordingly I have used a large percentage of yellow cocks, but my results have not been in accordance with the views usually expressed.

If you will tolerate a few figures, I will give you my exact results for last season:—No. 1, yellow cock and buff hen, 8 young, 3 yell., 5 buff; No. 2, ditto, 3 young, 2 yell., 1 buff; No. 3, yellow mkd. cock, buff hen, 8 young, 1 yell., 7 buff; No. 4, buff cock and mkd. yell. hen, 4 young, 1 mkd. yell., 3 mkd. buff; No. 5, yell. cock and buff hen, 3 young, 1 yell., 2 buff; No 6, mkd. yellow cock and buff hen, 4 young, 1 mkd. yell., 3 mkd. buff; No. 7, mkd. yellow cock and buff hen, 6 young, all buff; No. 8, yellow cock and cap buff hen, 4 young, all buff. Summarising these results, we obtain these figures: From seven yellow cocks I got 36 youngsters; of these 8 were yellow and 28 buff. That is a percentage of 22¼ yellows. I have ignored the results from No. 4 pair, in which was the only buff cock I used, as I consider the results from any single pair could not form the basis of a conclusion.

If we now consider these pairings a little more deeply, and study as far as we can the predecessors of these birds, it may be interesting: Nos. 1 and 2 I bought of a celebrated breeder, who gave up some eighteen months ago, and my sole reason for doing so was that when I entered his room I was struck with the large number of yellows he had. He pointed out an old cap yellow cock, and this he said was the ancestor of much of his stock. You will note that from these two birds I got 11 youngsters, 5 yellows and 6 buffs, a percentage of 45 yellows. Further, I ran one of these cocks with a feeding hen, and she threw me three youngsters, all yellow; one of these three was the hen I sold at the pair show.

Nos. 3 and 6 were cocks I bred myself in 1912. These were from a yellow cock and a heavily marked buff hen. These gave a percentage of 25 yellows. Nos. 5, 7 and 8 were all bred from buff cocks and yellow hens and gave me a percentage of only 8 yellows.

Now when by using yellow cocks one is able to produce only 25 per cent. of yellow young, I am much afraid I cannot at present subscribe to the theory that the male bird influences the colour to the extent that some would have us believe. I am well aware that one must not attempt to draw too definite conclusions from such small figures, but if, as I hope, some other members will take up the study of this point we may be able to produce some tangible results.

What Really Governs Colour?

If I am asked what does govern colour, I must candidly confess I shall be unable to give a definite answer. I am strongly of opinion that it is the method of breeding that will supply the solution, and I think it will be found by an application of the following principles. No doubt you will have noticed that in more than one sphere of animal life some males much more than others seem to have the power, or at any rate the pre-disposing property, of stamping their own characteristics, and, if I may use the word, individuality, on their offspring. Is there no one in this room who does not know of a family, the junior members of which resemble the father much more than the mother, or where the majority of the children are boys, or vice versa? Have not any of you some birds that seem to have the power of reproducing their own qualities, whether those of colour, shape, or feather, much more strongly than others?

It is not my intention to pursue this line or argument any further, interesting as it is, but only to use it as a guide.

Breeding Bullfinches in Captivity.

SIR,—Mr. Stanley Dare, in the last issue of CAGE BIRDS, asks if it is possible to breed Bullies in confinement. Some years ago a lady member of our Bedford Society turned out a pair of Bullies in a small green-house, fixed up a branch of a tree in one corner, and placed therein a nest-pan. A nest was built, and young ones raised, and I had the pleasure on several occasions of secing the hen building, sitting, and feeding her young. I hope Mr. Dare will be equally successful.

J. C. WILMOT.

A Reader Sends Thanks.

SIR,—Please let Mr. Claude St. John know that I have followed the advice given in his answer to my question re Canary with swelling round eye, as given in CAGE BIRDS of June 5, and the swelling has nearly disappeared; in fact, his advice has saved the life of a very good hen, and she has recovered so nicely that she is getting ready to nest again. It is a great help to those who keep birds to get CAGE BIRDS every week and profit by the information contained in each week's number.

J. PAWLEY.

The Ordeal by Water.

SIR,—The following unique experience may commend itself to your readers. On June 5 I was expecting some young Canaries to hatch, early in the morning. By three o'clock the youngsters had not arrived, so I prepared to test the eggs by placing them in hot water. As I was lifting one of the eggs out of the hot water it fell into a basin partly full of cold water, and the shell smashed. I felt sure the young bird was alive, so I put the egg back into the nest, although I was very dubious as to the result. In spite of the above the bird hatched out, and is still living. Is this a record?

H. ODELL.

"Cage Birds" in the Dardanelles

SIR,—Just a few lines to let you know that I have had the good old paper, CAGE BIRDS, sent to me in the trenches out here, and it makes one feel quite cheerful to read about the doings in one's favourite hobby. Please give my kind remembrance to the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. through your paper, as I was a member of that society before the war. I am sorry to say I had to part with all my birds when the war broke out, but I hope to start again when I return. I might say I have had your valuable paper sent to me through the kind thoughts of my wife. I wish the members of the M. and N.C.O.S. every success during the breeding season.

E. RAPER.

Colour Feeding Without Eggs.

SIR,—Would you ask through CAGE BIRDS' correspondence columns for some brother fancier to give a good receipt for mixing colour food without the use of eggs? Eggs at twopence each mean a great expense for a working man, when he has to colour-feed about 30 Yorkshires. I should be very grateful for any information. I may say that my young birds have already commenced to moult now, June 19. Also I would like to know how to feed Green Yorkshires for colour.

E. WILLIAMS.

[Articles on the makng of soft food without eggs have appeared from time to time in our columns, and the matter is also fully treated in the article "How to reduce the food bill," by Mr. Claude St. John, which appears in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1915. All the same, we shall be glad to publish any ideas from readers which may help our correspondent.—Editor "C.B."]

The Recent Welsh National Show.

A Gratifying Result.

SIR,—As intimated recently through the medium of your esteemed paper, the accounts in respect to the above show needed the final audit at the hands of the official auditors, Messrs. Rev. C. B. Jolliffe and H. C. Smith. This task has now been accomplished, and has revealed the pleasing fact that a profit of no less than £17 10s. was available for the Prince of Wales's Fund, which was duly handed to Claude Williams, Esq., the esteemed President of the Society, and gratefully acknowledged. On behalf of my colleagues I take this opportunity of again expressing thanks for and appreciation of the manner in which the Fancy generally rallied round the venture, and assured so gratifying a result.

E. W. ALLSOPP,
Hon. Sec.

A Fertile Twite-Canary Mule.

SIR,—Mr. Meek, of Hunstanton, writes to say he has fertile eggs from his Twite-Canary Mule, and hen Canary. He wrote to me last year and claimed to have bred this cross, and proposed sending it to some show where I was judging, so that I could see it, but the difficulty in sending birds by rail, and scarcity of shows that were easily got at from Hunstanton, prevented him doing so. H. NORMAN.

The Craze for Size in Norwich Plainheads.

SIR,—I thank Mr. Brown for his correction, and I gladly withdraw my comment so far as the matter of size is concerned. It is evident, however, that our Plymouth friend has not receded from the view of the Cinnamon variety, or at any rate its breeders, having accomplished a better ideal than found in the Plainheads, and it would be interesting to have his whole case in support thereof.

E. W. ALLSOPP.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success.

More Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids.

SIR,—I am pleased to report further progress with Song-Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids. In the second nest there have hatched out four young, and they are all doing well. They are ten days old to-day, June 15, the mother Blackbird still doing all the feeding. The first two are now feeding well on soft food, though unfortunately the best marked one has gone wrong in the feet.

T. H. ANDERSON.

Canary Breeding in Newfoundland.

SIR,—Thanks for sending on the copies of your excellent paper, as ordered. I have now ordered CAGE BIRDS through a local newsagent, so I hope to get it regularly. I thoroughly enjoy it, and am trying to breed a few Norwich Plainheads and Border Fancies. I have got eight youngsters on the perches now. For a working man it is an expensive hobby here, for one cannot get seeds, material, and birds as fanciers can at home, besides having not the best of climates (in winter) for birds. Luckily we have hot-water heating. Singing Canaries bring good prices, so we are hoping to at least clear expenses. As for breeding, I know of no one else trying it at present here. I have already ordered some of the books you publish, and have St. John's "Canary Breeding," which is my directory.

A. BROWN.

St. John's, Newfoundland.

Proposed Fanciers' Protection Association.

SIR,—I was pleased to read in CAGE BIRDS of June 12 that there is to be a Protection Association, and I should have been more pleased if you had seen your way to take a hand in the working of the same. I hope yet that you can come to some working arrangement, as it is my opinion that we are in need of such a body. I would ask that those forming the association put men into the various offices who are real fanciers, and not men that are in the Fancy for what they can get out of it, if not directly, indirectly; that is, by being in office they can buy and sell at an advantage. I also would suggest that the committee open up a bit wider, as by the reading of the letter they propose to deal only with dealers and others who make false declarations as to sex, etc., of birds. I propose that they take in fraudulent practices at shows, such as showing birds that are not one's own property, and some other things that we know of. We in the Bird Fancy seem to be a long way behind, for all other fancies have a governing body, and it seems strange that we have let drop out of existence first the Cage Bird Club and then the Cage Bird Union. What is the cause? Is there so much jealousy about that we cannot agree? Surely not. But if so, it is time we purge ourselves from such and start another governing body. I am at one with the fanciers who wish to purify the Fancy, as I know there are good men connected with the same, so if the association can be formed and should come to a sound understanding, I shall be one of the first to become a member. Wishing our only bird paper every success.

The Norwich Plainhead and How to Improve it.

SIR,—Mr. Bastock is nothing if not candid, even in the manner in which he relegates the most important matter to a back seat, after admitting good heads in our breed have been secured even with the Cinnamon, in addition to the Crestbred cross. I believe with a little pressing he would also admit that he had bred or seen quite decent heads produced from the Yorkshire cross, and really when he came to reflect, even the old-fashioned cross with the Lizard left the Plainheads with quite decent heads. Then no doubt he would make a determined stand against the introduction of the Scotch or Belgian cross; much too snipy and snaky, no doubt; but would compromise easily regarding the Lancashire cross by admitting if no better than the Crestbred; it was certainly little worse.

As a matter of fact to-day, as for years past, the ideal Plainhead is the envy and despair of every breeder excepting perhaps my Birmingham friend. With sufficient feather of good quality, the ideal head can in effect be produced ad lib. In the early show season we note the wide entrance, the bold sweeping rise of the skull, the gentle fall into the more massive curves of the body, which only finally lose themselves when entering the straight of its tail. When a higher level of condition is reached, say in January or February, those same captivating heads are all more or less marked by pinched, narrow, and flat entrances, and browing, guttering, twists and horns. Indeed the only portion of the head that always seems to hold its own against everything is the portion of the skull behind the eyes. Never any flatness there, even when the cock is singing the hen round the cage. And why? Simply because it is naturally in structure just what breeders require. When it comes, however, to the skull from the base of the beak, almost for the distance to the eyes, we are up against an arrangement that is not naturally adapted to what we require; for instead of a broadly rising skull, commencing from the base of the beak, upon which it would be impossible for the bird to show any flatness, no matter how ridiculous he made himself in other respects, we have to contend with a flat plateau from which the skull proper rises all too late, that is to please us, of course. Some better student of avian physiology than myself can no doubt explain the why and wherefore of this dreary flat region. Sufficient for us is to recognise its existence, and whilst we get over this defect (to us) by plentifully padding with feather, the fact must not be lost sight of that the progressive, plodding breeder, whilst accepting effect for the time being, is yet anxious to breed a skull which shall truly be ideal. It is because such breeders are up against a tampering or attempted structural alteration that they realise the gravity of their task, and recognise that more than their possibly long lifetime will not bring about any visible change. This is why our Plainhead heads are truly little, if any, better than those of 25 or 50 years ago. In effect I know they are better by reason of their more massiveness, in harmony as it were with our massive bird of to-day: and because of the freer application of feather or padding. Some may argue this is getting down too much to the science of the matter. What is fancy breeding but a science: and is it not better for the beginner to realise exactly what he is up against, and how little progress, the real progress, can be marked even in a lifetime? Hundreds of beginners are under the impression that the ideal type of skull, the permanently good head, exists in the rooms of the star breeders, birds which money cannot buy. Quite true the latter, because such perfect skulls are non-existent, and therefore cannot be bought. To those pessimists who would say such a desirable type of skull cannot be accomplished, I would point to the Pigeon fancy, for there are breeds of widely divergent types of skull. Take the Homer, the Owl, or Turbit, all produced, I understand, from a common stock. Mr. Bastock may boast of his successful crosses, but I defy him to turn to any one variety of Canary that will better remedy the present structural formation of skull in our breed than any other. The Crestbred may at first thoughts seem to be just the cross, but the well padded entrance characteristic of the breed only brings effect, not progress. Is Mr. Bastock out for real progress, or only effect? Mr. Brown, I know, is for something lasting, so are many silent breeders, that is why they realise breeding of the ideal specimen in a long lifetime, or the attainment, even in a small measure, of the end to which they have been working is worth the candle. Instead of suggesting an outcross for heads, encourage the small beaks, for where these are smallest there seems less disposition for the flat entrance, and some encouragement for the skull to rise earlier in its life or career. E. W. ALLSOPP.

Snap Shots From Sheffield.

To add interest to the meetings of the Sheffield C.B.S. it was arranged to have at the meeting of June 4 a competition consisting of original papers contributed by the members, and by the kindness of Mr. E. Sisson, assist. sec., we are able to publish these in the interests of our readers.

Breeding Procedure in Brief.

STOCK should be purchased in November, if possible. The cocks should be placed in separate cages and the hens in good large flight cages, during the winter. Chief diet, plain canary seed. Black rape given twice a week is useful to both cocks and hens, half-teaspoonful each bird. As a tit-bit give apple or banana twice a week. February, give half-teaspoonful per bird, three times per week, of the following mixture:—hemp, maw, teazle, gold of pleasure and summer rape. March, same as February, but on alternate days give half-teaspoonful of egg and bread, or egg and biscuit; also a sprig of watercress or dandelion twice a week. These should bring your birds into breeding form by end of March.

Thoroughly examine your stock from the relationship and type and size points of view. Avoid pairing birds with the same faults. When paired give them a little moss to "play" with. When you find the hen commence sleeping in the nest-pan see that she has a good nest. When the young are 26 or 28 days old they will generally feed themselves.

If the youngsters are at all promising commence at once preparing them for the show bench, aiming at getting the birds steady. When 8 to 10 weeks old commence to colour-feed them, giving it weak at first, gradually increasing the strength. Shade your birds, but don't keep them in the dark, as "Light is Life."—"ORION."

The Life Story of a Ticked Norwich

MY early recollections are rather limited. I found myself in a warm, snugly-lined nest along with two others of my kind. My life was in jeopardy in the first two or three days of my existence. Owing to my natural love of warmth I had crept into my mother's feathers and was having a peaceful nap when someone stepped suddenly into the room. My mother made a flying exit from the nest and nearly carried me with her. However, I still breathe!

My greatest difficulty seemed to be to get enough to eat, but thanks to an attentive mother and a pushing disposition, I arrived at last on the nest pan edge ready to launch myself into the world. After shivering on the brink for some time I took the fateful leap and landed on the cage floor. I proceeded to hop around, and after a few unsuccessful attempts managed to reach and balance on a perch.

The next important crisis I remember was being taken from Ma. How I cried when I was hungry and she was not there to feed me! I waited for her until I thought I should die, then espied something in a little white pot on the floor. Shyly I approached it and thrust in my beak. Hey, presto! it was egg food, and after a good feed I slept for some time. Days slipped by, with constant fights, etc., until one day my master, coming up to the cage, hung on a smaller one, and chased me into it with a stick. I resented this at first, but soon began to understand it was where I had to display my good points, and so eventually I managed to attain a correct pose.

In a week or two I was put into one of these small cages, specially clean, and taken out in a dark box. I eventually found myself in a large room, and standing in a long row, with scores of others of my kind. After careful handling by a stranger (I afterwards heard he was the "judge") I was moved about a great deal. Presently I found myself in a permanent position, with a piece of red cardboard fastened in the top corner of my cage.

I was only in my nest feathers then, and as the season was getting on I began to feel off colour. I started to lose a few feathers, but before this I had had a new sort of food. It was a bright red. When first I tasted it I did not like it, but after noticing it had a warm, soothing effect on me, I ate greedily. I am now of a bright orange colour, and the improvement is evidently due to this red food. I went out to the shows, and had several cards on my cage, including a good number of red ones.

I am now in possession of a wife. My attempts at connubial bliss were at first a bit boisterous, but after settling down I became the father of three youngsters. I hope they will be as successful as their father, for my master is kindness itself and deserves their best endeavours. I am perfectly happy, and as I finish this epistle I am singing to the glorious sunlight which streams through the window.—"TICKED NORWICH."

LONDON AND PROVINCIAL O.S.

Table show of young Canaries and Mules, Brit. and For., Raglan Hotel, Aldersgate Street, June 17. Prominent among the exhibitors were Mme. Madewell, of Dulwich, and Mrs. W. Gould, of Park Lane, who is at present busily engaged in hospital work, and she kindly spared an hour or so of her valuable time to bring to the show several exhibits, including a pair of young wild Canaries, believed to be the only specimens in the British Isles. The parents of the birds were caught in Teneriffe, and while Mrs. Gould was in Nice, the hen laid two small eggs, which hatched in Paris. The young birds had a rough crossing on the Channel, and were reared here in England. Mr. J. Oldaker, Leyton, judged, and gave entire satisfaction, forty birds being staged.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

LAST SEASON'S COLOUR FOOD (F. K.).—If the colour food you had left over from last season has been properly kept in a closely covered glass or glazed earthen jar, or in an air-tight tin, I see no reason why you should not use it this season. If a sufficiency of oil was added to it last year when first blended, there is no necessity to add any more now. If you use the food alone, it would be best to use it at the beginning of the season, during that portion of the season when you are giving a little food before the moult has actually commenced. Otherwise, you should blend this food with the bulk of the fresh food you prepare for this season's moult, in order to have the whole of the food of the same strength and quality throughout the present season.

QUALITY OF HEMP (Ajax).—The sample of hemp is of very good quality and quite fit to give your young Canaries, or old ones, too, for that matter. You need have no scruples in using it.

SWEATING YOUNG (W. W. G.).—The moist appearance was undoubtedly due to diarrhœa in the youngsters, the dampness being caused by the watery evacuations of the young. A little powdered arrowroot mixed with the egg food, and a morsel of bread and milk freely dusted with carbonate of bismuth daily for a few days, and five drops each of tincture of opium and dilute sulphuric acid in the water for one-half of each day for a few days, would probably have saved the situation, but it would need to be combined with absolute cleanliness in the cages, and all food and also all vessels in use. When the next brood are due to hatch, add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to the drinking water for one day, and on the two following days add instead five drops of dilute sulphuric acid the last thing at night, and throw this out at mid-day next day and replace with pure water. Do not give moist or over-succulent green food. Seedy chickweed will be about the best you can get. Sprinkle the egg food with a little powdered arrowroot each day until the young are at least a week old, and give a teaspoonful of lightly cracked hemp daily; but see that it is quite sound and sweet in the kernel. Beyond this, follow the general treatment advised to "W.G.S." last week, and you should find things go more smoothly.

MISS F. LUTER.—Replied to by post.

CLEAR EGGS (F. P., Disappointed).—It is not possible to be quite certain what is the cause of clear eggs when both units of a pair of birds are apparently in good health and condition. You cannot even tell which of the birds is at fault without testing by trying each one with a fresh mate, and thus proving on which side the unfertility exists. It sometimes happens that a hen will consistently call to her mate and remain in the nest, and in that case, although mating may appear to take place repeatedly, it is the exception rather than the rule to find any of the clutches fertile. This habit may go on all through the season, and the result will be nil, notwithstanding that the birds are in the pink of condition. If this is what has been happening in your case, the only thing you can do is to try to prevent her squatting closely in the nest. When she is going to nest again, as soon as the nest is built place a bantam's or pigeon's egg, or any similar obstacle, in the cup of the nest for the greater part of each day until she has laid her third egg, and thereby increase the chances of mating taking place under conditions more favourable to success. Give a liberal supply of dandelion seed heads, or a growing stool of the plant daily. If the habit mentioned is not likely to be the cause in your case, the only thing I can suggest to ensure you a fair chance of getting young this season, is to try the birds with different mates at once.

ALL GOING WRONG (L.G.).—There can be little doubt that the birds have been exposed to the exciting causes of bronchial trouble during your removals, and I am afraid the future will be no better for them if you can find no other place for them than the bath room, which is about the least favourable place you could possibly offer for their accommodation. A spare corner of any room where no fires were kept would be much better. If, however, you cannot find any other room for them you must take care to prevent the room from getting very much overheated when the bath is being heated. Keep the cages as far away from the heating apparatus as possible, consistent with avoiding direct draughts when the room is being ventilated, and see that the ventilation is sufficient to prevent the room being overcharged with steamy vapour for any length of time after the bath has been heated. Treat the Norwich cock that pants badly as follows: Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape only. In addition, give separately half a teaspoonful of mixed seeds twice a week. Every second day for a fortnight give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with soft sugar. In the drinking water give, every second day for a week, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice; and after this give five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia and sweet spirit of nitre every second day in alternate weeks until better. You may offer a bath daily now the weather is warm, provided it does not seem to affect it badly afterwards. For two or three weeks treat the other birds that wheeze the same as above, but omit the preparatory dosage with Epsom salts. Every second day for a fortnight add a crystal of sulphate of iron the size of a large hemp seed to the water of those that are loose in feather, and on the alternate days give instead five drops each of dilute sulphuric acid and tincture of gentian. Offer these the bath daily.

GONE OFF SONG (W. H., Liverpool).—You do not say how long the bird has gone off song. If only just lately it is most likely that it is an early symptom of the approaching moult. The constant nibbling at the cage may also be a sign of the coming moult, or it may be a sign that the cage is infested with red mites. Examine the cage thoroughly for this pest, and if any are found take the necessary steps to exterminate them. See that the bird is not exposed to direct draughts, nor the fumes of burning lights, or rapid extremes of temperature. Try to get it to bathe itself by giving a slight blow from the spray daily, then hang on a bath and remove the drinking vessel for an hour or so. Place a small scrap of tempting greenstuff in the bath each day. In the course of a few weeks the bird will most likely be ready enough for its "dip" when the bath is offered. Give a staple diet of three parts canary seed to one part summer rape only. Twice a week give separately a small teaspoonful of the mixture you now use for a staple, and every second day for a fortnight give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with soft sugar. On the alternate days give just a pinch of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame. Give a little green food, in variety daily. In the drinking water for three days add as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice, and after this five drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every, second day for a week.

A POOR START (H.E.C., Constant Reader).—I am afraid there is very little chance indeed for you to do anything with these birds this season. Are you quite satisfied that they are true pairs? If so, you should try to get a clutch of fertile eggs of some common birds, or a clutch of some wild bird of the Finch tribe would do as well as anything, and give them to the hen that sits continually on the nest for her to hatch out and rear the young, which might result in bringing her to a normal condition for future breeding, though it is doubtful if she would do anything this season, seeing that the moult will be on by the time she could bring up such a brood. Try what the following treatment for a few weeks will do for the others. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition, give every second day to each pair half a teaspoonful of egg food with about half the same quantity of a mixture of gold of pleasure and sesame mixed in it, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and chopped sunflower seeds. Give a liberal supply of seedy dandelion, chickweed, shepherd's purse, and similar greenstuff daily. Every second day for a week add to the drinking water as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice, and after this give five drops each of tincture of steel and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. Encourage them to bathe freely by offering the bath daily.

A FRIENDLY CRITIC (J. G. P.).—Most certainly I do not object to your criticism of a chance remark I made in one of these replies that the querist had not made a very good use of the study of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," to be giving crushed hemp to birds with young at three days old, whereas somewhat similar advice is apparently given in Chapter XI. of the book. But that reply and the book are not so much at variance as may seem to be the case, as the supply of hemp being used by the querist is a very different thing from a little in a finger drawer, and the free supply afterwards does not necessarily mean that the supply should form a not inconsiderable portion of the whole dietary, though I readily admit that in this place the term "liberal supply" might have been more fully explained, and probably will be so in future editions. It is not so much that a liberal supply should not be given, as that the supply should depend to some extent upon the character and temperament of the particular hen. In all the other cases you point out it is made quite clear in the book that it is meant to apply only to certain exceptional cases which are likely to crop up and which require special treatment. In fact, the only difference that exists is that the book has necessarily to deal with the subject on broad general principles, whilst these replies touch more narrowly the details of individual cases. Later on I may make this point more clear. Glad you find the book so useful, nevertheless.

KEEPING EGGS (T. F.).—If you could have set the eggs you took from the hen which had sat on them two days in a fairly warm and not too dry place, covered with bran, and given them a half-turn every morning and evening, you might have had a possible chance of them hatching successfully had you re-set them in the course of a few days, but there would have been a great risk of them proving addled. After keeping them until now there will not be the slightest chance of hatching them.

PANTING HEN (B. J. S.).—Sorry to disappoint you, but I do not think you have the least chance of breeding successfully with this hen this season; moreover, as she is obviously not in a fit condition to breed, I think you would be best advised to discard her entirely from the breeding cage. You would do far better to get a young—1914 bred—hen in sound vigorous health, that has not been overworked, and is ready to go to nest quickly; then you would stand a fair chance of getting a brood before the moult puts a stop to further breeding operations. To treat this hen give a diet of plain canary seed only with a liberal supply of green food in variety for a week, and add to the water twenty drops of fluid magnesia every second day. After this, feed as frequently advised in this column, and give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with maw-seed twice a week; give a little seedy greenstuff daily; and add twenty drops of Chemical Food to the water daily for a week. Then, if the panting is still troublesome, give five drops each of tincture of lobelia, ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a fortnight. Be careful to see that the bird is kept as free as possible from the exciting causes of colds and bronchitis, as frequently mentioned here.

VARIED (Inquisitive).—(1) Unless you have certain proof to the contrary, I should say that both of the pair of Canaries you had mated were hens, and that the one you thought the cock was in fair breeding condition, and would have bred all right if she had been mated properly. The other hen was not in breeding condition at all. I think your best chance of success this season is to try a lusty young cock in vigorous song with the supposed cock Canary you have left. If she settle down to work at once, she may manage to pull off a brood before the moult sets in. (2) The safest plan is to mate breeding hens in the ordinary way, and then you can either discard their own eggs and replace them with the hybrid eggs at the commencement of incubation, or allow them to sit on their own eggs and exchange the young when the hybrids are ready. The actual method is governed to a certain extent by the necessities of the case—the hybrid eggs may not, for instance, be ready when the Canary's clutch is complete. (3) With birds bred and kept hitherto under normal conditions of temperature, and cages of good size, if kept in a fairly sheltered position, and placed out now, so that the birds would get well acclimatised before the winter began, you should be able to keep your birds out of doors all the year round in the best of health and condition.

CAUSE OF DEATHS (F. W.).—Only a post-mortem could decide definitely what was the cause of the young dying, and if you have any more losses I should advise you to lose no time in ascertaining the exact cause of death by this means. (See notice at head of Post-mortem Replies.) Meantime, keep the cage in which the deaths have occurred, all its appurtenances, and the birds occupying it, isolated from the rest of your stock. There is a chance that it is some infectious disorder, and this is only a precautionary measure until you are assured on the point. I am inclined to think, however, that the deaths were due to apoplexy, arising out of a plethoric condition. The birds should not be solely upon soft food at six weeks old. Begin to reduce the quantity of egg food at once, and give a pinch of summer rape on top of it each morning, and put on a separate vessel of canary seed. In the afternoon give only a small quantity of egg food, and make up the usual bulk with cracked hemp—see that it is sound in the kernel—niger, millet and broken groats in equal parts. As soon as you see by the husks in the seed box that the birds are eating a fair amount of canary seed, stop the soft food in the afternoon and give only the mixed seed then. Give a few green plantain stalks or seed heads of shepherd's purse, or sprays of seedy chickweed four times a week, and I think you will soon see an improvement in the condition of the birds. For the next three days add a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and ten drops of lemon juice to each ounce of drinking water, and after that add to the same quantity of water six drops of aromatic sulphuric acid for a few days.

SHRIKES IN AN AVIARY (Thomas).—If you are keen on trying to breed with Shrikes in captivity, your best plan would be to secure a nest or two of young ones, hand-rear them, and save a pair of the most docile. You would do nothing with birds freshly-caught this spring. Shrikes nest almost directly they arrive in this country, and would now be rearing a brood. So you see it is too late to do anything this season. If you try another year, you must give them the aviary to themselves; Finches would not be safe with them. With your Goldfinches you could turn in any of the Finches and the Yellow, Reed and Cirl Buntings (2) In captivity, Shrikes should be fed on good insectile food, mealworms, beetles, gentles, etc., and occasionally a small dead bird or a little meat.

THE WHITE-LEGGED GOLDFINCH (W.W.G.).—In a wild state the legs of the Goldfinch are black, or rather very dark dirty brown. After his first moult in captivity they are considerably paler, and at each successive moult they get lighter. If a bird is moulted in an ordinary bird room, his legs will be much paler than if moulted in an aviary or hung outside daily.

FEEDING A MAGPIE (Magpie). The Magpie is not a difficult bird to feed. Let him have as a staple diet some crushed puppy biscuits, soaked in hot water or gravy. This could be varied with "Melox" treated in the same manner. Give scraps from the table, such as pieces of potato, or other vegetables, suet pudding, shredded meat, etc. He should also occasionally have a freshly-killed mouse or small bird. He will sometimes eat a few grains of corn, especially if they are previously soaked. To teach the bird to talk, repeat constantly a short sentence to him, especially when you are giving him food; he soon learns to associate the two together, and will commence to chatter when hungry. After the first few words are mastered others quickly follow. Although nearly all Magpies mimic, some are much better than others; if you want your bird to be really good, you must persevere and take every opportunity of talking to him.

SEPTIC FEVER (Mary E. N. Slater).—I fear I am unable to give you much assistance, as I am thankful to say my experience with this dread disease has been very limited, and then only with other fanciers' birds. I do not think you can do better than disinfect cages, etc., allow plenty of fresh air, feed the birds as carefully as possible, and do not leave any soft food lying about, or anything likely to convey germs to healthy birds. I would also advise you to carefully read the article in the last issue of CAGE BIRDS upon this subject; this should assist somewhat in your treatment.

HYBRID PAIR NOT NESTING (F.J.W.S.).—The majority of Hybrid pairs do not nest until late, and there is still time for yours. By your description I should think your chances are quite favourable. I would advise you to be liberal with building materials; get an old Bullfinch nest, if you can, or one of any of the other Finches, and put that in; they will probably pull it to pieces and use it to build a fresh one. Feed well, particularly with wild food, including plenty of shepherd's-purse and seeding grass; gather it carefully, so as to retain the ripe seeds, and any insects among it.

FEEDING YOUNG MULES (Very Anxious).—When young Mules are removed from the parents they should still be supplied with egg-food, a little soaked rape twice a week, and cracked seeds, giving just a little hemp (fresh each time) in a separate pot. I find the first food they take after the egg is a few grains of split groats. A small spray of chickweed or shepherd's-purse can be given daily, but take away any they do not eat. In rearing the young you rather overdo the hemp; my own method is to give egg-food and green stuff during the day, and a spoonful of hemp about five o'clock in the afternoon when the old birds are feeding strongly, they then used this up at once. Supply the young bird that is not doing well with bread and milk, and put a drop or two of cod liver oil on it. If he will eat seed, give him a little maw. If he does not recover in a few days, continue the bread and milk, and give 10 drops tincture of quinine and six drops aromatic sulphuric acid in the drinking water. Keep cages thoroughly clean. (2) If the young Greenfinch Mules are feeding themselves, you should be able to save them; perhaps you can get them to take a little off the end of a stick and so hand-feed them yourself. Do this for a few days and they will soon be all right. Of course, if the cock will take them on, you will have no more trouble. Young Mules are generally very precocious, and will feed themselves several days earlier than Canaries. You had better keep them for the present in the compartment adjoining his, and then when they are well on to food, transfer them to an ordinary cage or flight.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

PROSPECTIVE AVIARY (Grayscn).—I have sent you a rough diagram, marking thereon the essential fittings. The lobby round the door inside the room will enable you to enter without danger of the escape of the birds; it will also serve to ventilate the room when weather does not permit the window to be opened. You can also show your birds to friends without entering the room. The window must be covered with wire netting on the inside; a small door should be placed in the netting to enable you to open and close the window at will. The fireplace must also be screened with wire netting. All these fittings can be easily made with a little 1½in. x 1in. quartering; the wire netting must be of ½in. mesh. The floor of the room must be covered with oilcloth or lino, which must be securely fastened down to prevent refuse getting under; it is also easily kept clean. The walls must be lined with twiggy branches, so as to form a sort of hedge around the parts indicated. The branches can be easily fixed by driving in a few staples, hooks, or nails, and fastening the branches thereto with binding wire. Various nest receptacles can be placed amid and at the back of the branches. This arrangement will leave the centre of the room open for the birds to take flight exercise. A large tray should be provided, in the centre of which the bath is to stand, thus keeping the floor of room dry. The list suggested to "W.H.S." was given by our British Bird expert, and for any information concerning same you must apply to him. All the foreign finches, Waxbills, Mannikins, Weavers, Whydahs, Buntings, etc., advertised in our columns from time to time should thrive in your birdroom.

EATING ITS FEATHERS (F. Tanner).—It will be a work of time curing this bird of the annoying habit of feather eating, which, once a bird becomes confirmed in, is seldom entirely given up. Do not give hemp separately; there will be sufficient of this seed in the mixture. Also some ripe fruit daily, any kind it will eat, various nuts, and greenfood, such as seeding and flowering grass and garden weeds; also lettuce, but cut out the fleshy mid rib before supplying to the bird. Do not give tea, coffee or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. If it has been accustomed to moistened food at all, give it a stale crust of household bread lightly moistened with chemical food and water. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day. The bowels should move quite freely, but the voidings should not be watery-loose. If the latter occurs you must then give the magnesia less frequently. Continue to spray with quassia solution, as this will tend to give the plumage a bitter taste and make it distasteful to the bird. Also it would be well to boil a little of the maize. Boil till soft (grain should be whole); drain off all water, lightly dust with flowers of sulphur, and supply to the bird when cool. If the bird appears at all weak, then on the days you are not giving the magnesia lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Report progress about a month hence, with full details.

WHAT BIRDS? (H.G.B.).—(1) This is Palaeornis fasciata, of which lathami is a synonym. Its trivial names are Banded and Monstache Parrakeet. (2) I think you are in error in saying a hybrid would be out of court with this bird; such a bird should be possible with either of the following: P. fasciata x P. alexandri or P. fasciata x P. nipalensis, either of these crosses, provided the male parent was dominant in the progeny, might produce such a bird as you describe. However, I think your bird is Palaeornis derbyana. You can easily test it. The under-wing coverts in derbyana are the same colour as the breast; in fasciata they are green. If it is not derbyana, it is either a hybrid or an abnormal hen fasciata.

CAN IT BE DONE? (Ritep).—(1) Yes, it is possible to breed foreign species in cages, but it is not as simple as breeding Canaries. No wild species, whether British or Foreign, can be relied upon to breed in a cage; nevertheless, many species have been so bred, but it is not every pair of the same species that will do so under the conditions you name. Neither do you pair them up like Canaries. You must put a pair in the cage and leave them there summer and winter indefinitely till they settle down to nesting. Zebra Finches, Cutthroats, Silverbills, Bengalese, Bib Finches, White Java Sparrows, would be about the best for you to begin with. (2) For such species as indicated above the season may be said to be from spring to early autumn. (3) Canary, white and Indian millet, spray millet, green food, grit, and cuttlebone. When feeding young a little of some good insectile mixture (soft food) must be given daily.

CAGE FOR BUDGERIGAR (M.G.L.).—You will have to get one made. It should be of semi-box type, 30in. long, 18in. deep, and 18in. high. The coconut husk should be fixed inside the cage. Any of the cage makers advertising in our columns should be able to make you a suitable cage from above description. Do not have straight perches; use twiggy branches for the purpose. I am rightly not permitted to recommend any special advertiser. The cheapest of anything is often the dearest in the long run. Go to a firm with a reputation to keep up and you will usually get a good article and good value.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

H. M. Vince.—Goldie succumbed to pneumonia following emphysema of the lungs, which was of long standing.

J. P. Thornton and Son.—Canary died of congestion of the liver and spleen, due to the ingestion of poisonous substances with the food. Get a fresh supply of seed, give staple of best canary, with a pinch of rape once weekly; discontinue hemp for a time.

L. J Moore.—Inflammation of the bowels, probably of ptomaine origin.

H. C. Perks.—Congestion of the lungs, owing to its sedentary occupation, and influenced by the warm weather. A cardiac stimulant such as aromatic spirits of ammonia might have been effective.

T. H. Marshall.—Septic fever. The bodies had undergone partial decomposition, which rendered diagnosis rather difficult. Another examination would be advisable, although I have not much doubt that this is the trouble.

L. W. Winter.—Disease of the liver and spleen induced by ptomaine poison, introduced with the food, and contributed to by the warm weather. Give a saline aperient in the drinking water for three successive days, afterwards following with Condy's Fluid in the drinking water. Strict cleanliness of seed hoppers and drinking utensils is essential.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Wm. Green.—One of the firms which at one time advertised Roller Canaries in CAGE BIRDS is a German firm, and their advt., of course, does not appear in existing circumstances. We think you would at present find it difficult or impossible to get the birds in small numbers from the Continent, even from neutral countries.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

Summer Silence.

Every week brings with it new blossoms, but one misses the song in the woods. In these long days the Thrush and Blackbird are too preoccupied to sing. Like the housewives of England and France, they have many cares. Their fledged offspring are in peril, but they must bide in their bush, where no doubt they meditate graver themes than those expressed in song.—"Daily Mail."

I beg to thank you for your extreme courtesy in replying by post to my Canary query, for which there was no room in your last issue, writes Col. W. J. Bosworth, London, S.W. I should like also to thank Mr. Claude St. John for his ample and lucid answers to my questions. You and your staff are a very present help in time of trouble.

In times so anxious as those through which we are now passing, the relief afforded by occasional diversion cannot be other than beneficial. Metropolitan bird lovers will find an opportunity for such relaxation at the Young Bird show of the City and Suburban to-day (Saturday) at the Church Institute, 60, Paddington Street (just round the corner from Baker Street stations). There is a record entry of over 40 in the novice Clear Yorks class, and the total entry is more than 200.—Advt.

Red-footed Sparrows.

It is stated that considerable interest was recently aroused by the appearance in Regent's Park of a Sparrow with red feet. The authorities consulted admitted the peculiarity was new in their experience, and it was left to a keeper at the Zoo to offer a solution of the problem. The London pillar-boxes had just been re-painted.—"Yorkshire Post."

A Treat for Aberystwyth.

The magnificent collection of birds got together by the late Capt. Cosens, of Brondaparn, has been presented to the Aberystwyth College by Mrs. Cosens. Many of the birds were set up by Capt. Cosens himself, and the series includes some of the rarest of British birds. The collection will be on view as soon as the birds have been examined and mounted by the college authorities.

Another Fancier on the Roll of Honour.

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. T. Menzies, assist. sec. Cowdenbeath C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the death of Private Andrew Harvey, 7th Battalion, Black Watch, who was killed in action in France on June 18. He was an enthusiastic British bird fancier, and was a member of Cowdenbeath C.B.S. since its commencement. He leaves a wife and family to whom I am sure members of Cowdenbeath C.B.S. will extend their deepest sympathy.

OBITUARY.

MR. GEO. FULTON (Partick).

It is with great regret, writes Mr. A. M. Baird, that I have to inform you of the death of Mr. George Fulton, of Partick. He died on June 17 suddenly from heart failure, brought on through over-work at war material. Mr. Fulton was well-known all over Scotland, especially in Scotch Fancy circles, having been a keen Scotch Fancy breeder and exhibitor for over thirty years, and he was one of the ablest and perhaps the best known judge of the variety in Scotland. His was a cheery and optimistic nature, and his breezy and straightforward way of expressing himself at our leading shows, where his opinions were often asked, will be much missed. I am sure the heartfelt sympathy of Scotch Fancy men and others will be extended to his sorrowing wife and family in their sad loss. The funeral, June 19, was public, and a large party followed his remains to their last resting-place in Lambhill Cemetery. Amongst the mourners were a number of fanciers, including Messrs. Sievewright and Carr, Partick; McLauchlan and Black, Govan; Muir and McClure, Glasgow; Ferguson, Renfrew; Alex. Baird and A. M. Baird, Paisley.

The book is published at sixpence, but a copy will be sent to any reader of Cage Birds who will mention our paper, and enclose a penny stamp for postage, when making application to the address given above.

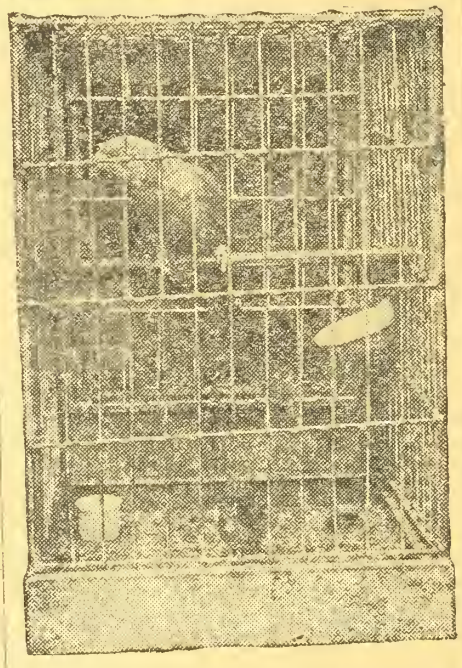
Too Much Nightingale!

I first heard the Nightingale about 50 years ago, when I was spending the week-end at a delightfully wooded residence at Wimbledon, says a correspondent to a Yorkshire paper. The garden was very extensive, comprising several acres, and no sooner had one Nightingale finished its notes for the time being than there was the answering call and challenge, from another Nightingale across the valley. I never slept a wink that night, and hoped and prayed I might never hear another Nightingale.



The Parrot which Mothered a Chicken.

INTERESTING DETAILS OF A STRANGE CASE.

As recorded in our issue of June 19, an Alexandrine Parrakeet, belonging to Mrs. Pledge, Bermondsey, has incubated a fowl's egg, bought from a provision shop. By the courtesy of the owner we are able to reproduce a photograph of the "mother and child." Both are doing well, and are living on the most amicable terms. The chick is seen on the bottom of the cage, while the Parrakeet seems to be challenging any interference with its precious "nestling."

In the Courts.

Cracked Eggs May be Taken.

Lewis Crowther, 19, mechanic, of Elland, was summoned at Halifax under the Wild Birds' Protection Act, for taking a Skylark's egg, on Sunday, May 23. In consequence of numerous complaints that had been received at Elland about eggs being taken, said Supt. Myers, watch had been kept, and it had been found that 15 birds' nests had been destroyed, and in one case five young birds killed. A lad named Joe Irving said that he saw defendant go to a Skylark's nest in the grass. He took three eggs out ,and replaced two. Another boy corroborated. P.C. Whiteley said defendant admitted taking the egg. At his home witness found a collection of about thirty.

Mr. David Garsed defended, and explained that defendant and a friend were taking a walk on Sunday, and going a short cut through some grass nearly stumbled over a nest. There were some boys about, and defendant, thinking they were after the eggs, took them out of the nest, so that the boys should not have them. He walked twenty yards, and when the boys had gone he went back to replace the eggs. He then found that one was cracked, and, thinking that a bird would not sit on a cracked egg, he took it home.—The case was dismissed.

WILD FOODS FOR SEED-EATING BIRDS.

By CHAS. PRIOR (Ropley).

The useful greenfoods, etc., available during July are herein described. Previous articles appeared in our issues of April 10 and the first weeks of May and June, and we have, we are pleased to say, been able to arrange with the Author to contribute a continuation in the first issue of each month.

THE last days of June mark the passing of spring; July hails the accession of the summer. Notwithstanding that June and July meet in the middle of the calendar, right at the zenith of the seasons, there is a marked divergence in the character of the spoils each places at the disposal of the keeper of birds.

June is of the spring. Spring, the juvenile of the seasons, is abundantly endowed with the quicksilver of youth. Its mercurial impulse penetrates all Nature. The wild foods reflect it in the magical rapidity of their progress to maturity, and in their vitalising effect upon the birds, as we have seen.

A Temporary Scarcity.

July acclaims the summer, and spring's weed-foods are done with. Attenuated now, their value is relatively negligible, and they yield ground to later weeds of tougher fibre and more tardy growth. Knapweed and thistle, charlock and plantain, teazel and dock are such, and these already, in July, are much in evidence. They are not seeding yet, however, and comment on them may await that function. But they foreshadow autumn.

The wild Finches in July continue to be mainly insectivorous, and in natural conditions they find inexhaustible sources of supply, but for those in domestication the tapping of many of these resources is rather impracticable. There is, however, one that may be added to those mentioned in last month's notes, and that is greenfly blight, a typical example of the parasitical insects to which few of the popular seedeaters are indifferent.

This pest is frequently to be found on fruit trees, clustering thickly on the underside of the leaves, and round the shoots of new growth at the tips of the branches. Roses, too, are very susceptible to its attacks, while in uncultivated areas it invades the crab-apple, bullace, sloe, and other wild fruit trees. In situations such as these it is readily accessible for the use of the bird-keeper.

The effectiveness of insects of this class in stimulating the reproductive instincts of pairs put up for breeding has already been the subject of comment. In addition to this, they have also a unique efficacy in the field of rearing operations, which a lucky incident enabled me to test one July some years ago.

How the Green Fly Helped.

At the back of my garden (an ordinary suburban plot) was an old derelict orchard. In this orchard stood a damson tree, so woebegone and unthrifty looking that my interest was at once enlisted. Investigation soon revealed the trouble; the tree was very badly infested with green-fly blight, every leaf being, in fact, literally smothered with the pestial aphis.

It happened that in my bird house at the same time was a nest of five newly-hatched Goldfinch-Linnet Hybrids, with the usual foster parent—a hen Canary. I lost no time in annexing a few leaves from the infested tree, all choked as they were with the blight, and offering them to the Canary. She tumbled to the idea at once, and thereafter the industrious little bird spent the whole of her time in picking the pests one by one from the leaves and the sides of the cage, over which they soon were crawling, and feeding them to the young hybrids.

The result was that three of those hybrids left the nest on the tenth day, and the other two on the eleventh. Not prematurely, understand. They were, in every respect, excepting the usual incompleted length of tail, perfectly fledged and well grown. It is, of course, unlikely that green-fly blight will often come to hand in such abundant measure as on the occasion here related, but the observant bird-keeper may all the same make many unexpected hauls from time to time this month.

The wild birds do, however, direct their attention more liberally to seeds of various kinds as July wears on. The rattle of the grass-cutters in the hayfields is the preliminary to the first considerable foraging excursions undertaken by the birds since May unlocked for them the bounteous stores of spring. Goldfinches, Linnets, and Greenfinches, old and young, hasten to the fallen grass, and range over it in small parties daily until it is picked up and carted off as hay.

A hayfield is a paradise to teeming hordes of parasites, and it is likely that they are the main attraction. But it cannot be doubted either that the half-ripe grass and other seeds are extensively eaten as well.

Then there are many breadths of kale, rape, and other vegetable crops, which the farmer finds it expedient to divert from their intended use as food for sheep and cattle, and leave to run on to seed. These will be seeding prodigally by mid-July, and they are raided by Linnets and other seedeating birds in force. And, right at the end of the month, the oats and other cereals are entering that stage of semi-ripeness which attracts all the wild Finches in the neighbourhood.

Sparrows and Greenfinches are certainly the most flagrant offenders in the purloining of these ripening seeds, but Linnets and Chaffinches, to say nothing of Yellow and Corn Buntings, are far from guiltless, and their combined depredations are very serious. They are not villains, of course. They are not ruffians either. But that they are robbers is plain. (With apologies to Mr. Bart Kennedy.)

The farmer vows that birds are over-protected, and retaliates with dust shot and Sparrow clubs. It may be doubted whether either policy—protection or destruction—has any appreciable effect. It is at the same time a great pity that some broadening influence cannot expand the cramped outlook of such worthy individuals, for instance, as the one who, most irresponsibly, recently traced a connection between the accident of a pair of birds reoccupying a building site for some time left unused and the absence of the bird-catchers who have responded to the call of their country. (May all good luck attend the erstwhile bird-catchers in the stern task that lies before them now.) But all this is not to the present purpose.

A Lettuce-like Thistle.

July has at least one wild food that is reminiscent of the spring. That is sow-thistle, or, otherwise, milk-thistle. This is a plant of sturdy yet succulent growth, but its foliage, although strongly resembling that of the thistle, is not at all painful to handle. Its seeding habit is entirely unlike any of the other thistles, and almost exactly like lettuce. Lettuce masquerading as thistle might be suggested as a plausible if unscientific parallel.

It is a useful food for all green-food eating birds—notably Goldfinches, Greenfinches, and Bullfinches, and it contributes heavily to brightness of breast colour in the last-named. Moreover, it is a much favoured host of the green-fly blight.

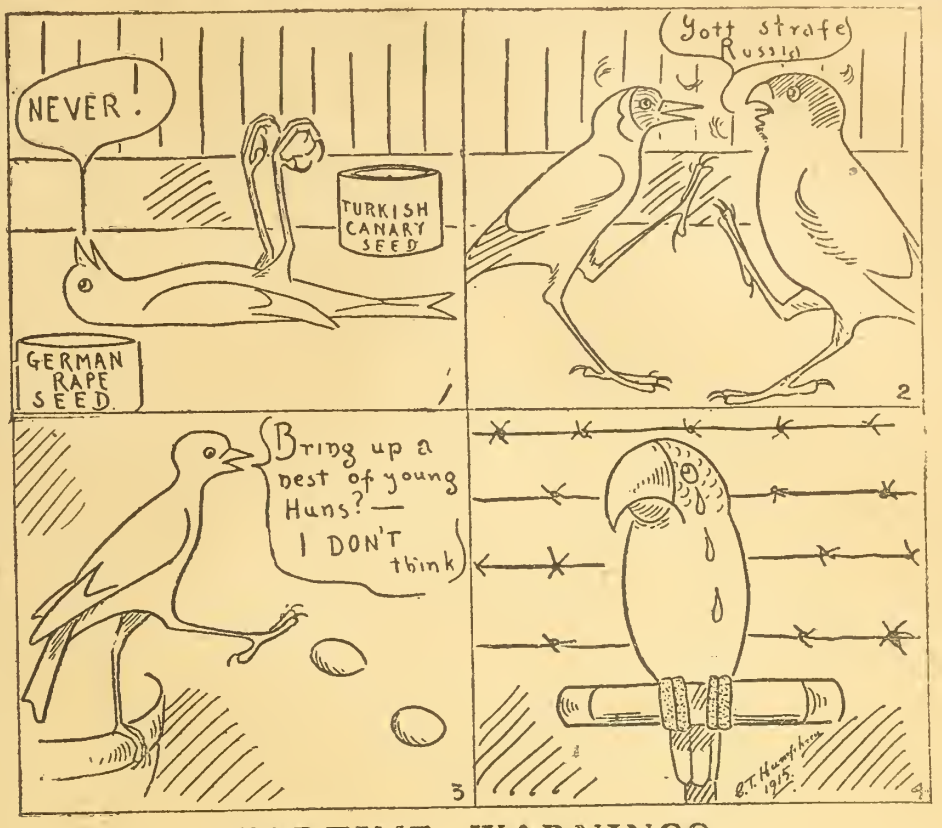
There are also, of course, the other essentially typical thistles, the kind that prick before they are touched, those of the uncompromising Scotch variety. These properly belong to a later season than July, but they are sometimes hurried prematurely into seeding by the activity of a plump white maggot that has long been domiciled, but hitherto innocently passive, within their heart, and now begins to eat a way out. These abnormally early heads are easily distinguished from the others by obvious signs of ripening, and they are excellent food for Goldfinches—the maggot included.

Lettuces in the garden that have run to seed are also of such benefit to these birds as to demand mention, although not coming strictly under the present heading. Green peas, again, are appreciated by most Greenfinches, Chaffinches and Bramblings, and held in high esteem by Hawfinches.

Useful to the Last.

Precisely to what extent shepherd's purse and the fine seeding grasses—most valued legacies of June—will overlap July will be determined by purely local influences, but until the sudden shedding of their ripened seeds abruptly ends their usefulness, they well repay exploiting in the birdroom.

Then there is ribwort, a weed akin to plantain (ratsta'l), which grows amongst the grass, and is of some small use for Linnets, as well as hawkweed and other composites with flowers like dandelion that may amuse the Goldies. In short, this is a month of odds and ends, and these, filling a gap in the seasons, are largely adventitious. It only remains to be added that it is the business of the bird-keeper to employ them in conformity with his individual opportunities and needs.



WARTIME WARNINGS.

1: Don't supply seed from enemy countries; your birds may "hunger-strike."
2: Don't try to breed Hybrids from Russian cock Goldfinches and German hen Bullies.
3: Don't expect British Canaries to hatch out the eggs of German Rollers.
4: If your Grey Parrot hails from German East Africa, intern it at once.

THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD.

Some remarks made by Mr. F. Cole, in opening a discussion, before the members of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. April 6th.

THE subject for our discussion this evening is one which I think has caused more controversy at meetings throughout the country, and more varied opinions in the Fancy Press, than any other. The Norwich Plainhead, however, is a bird which must have a prominent position in our society, inasmuch as we have among our members some of the foremost breeders in the Fancy.

Multum in Parvo.

Let us first remind ourselves of our ideal and then consider how best to attain or build it up. A Plainhead is a bird of type, quality, and colour, with a pleasing jaunty movement; a good broad head, with a nice rise over a small beak; a bold clean eye, large and free from browing, fearless, not sulky; full cheeks, set on a thick, short neck; broad chest, and plump, rounded body; short, neatly folded, and well braced wings, and stiff, nicely piped tail; the body carried as forward as possible on a pair of short, clean legs and feet; each part well built together, giving the bird a short, thick-set appearance, and forming most pleasing curves and graceful outline. We want to get these points embodied in a bird measuring 6½ inches from top of skull to tip of tail. What an ideal! What an opportunity for careful study and anxious thought!

We are sometimes told we may use with advantage the Crest-Bred and the Lancashire in the production of a large Plainhead. I am quite aware that I am treading on dangerous ground, and running the risk of being again told I have yet to cut my wisdom teeth, but faint heart never won fair lady, and if I offend I trust I may be forgiven.

Our subject is essentially a bird of type. How shall we control that type? I think you will all agree we like good hens, because they are, as it were, the mould in which the young are made. For myself, I like a good medium hen, as near show form as possible, nice soft silky feather, brilliant and compact, the one feather merging into the other so that one cannot see the feathers at all, forming a surface polished as evenly as marble. If you can get a hen approaching this description, and a cock well bred, do not mind the cock being a bit coarse in feather. He must, however, be as large as possible, plenty of bone, and good substance, large skull, and, "tell it not in Gath," he may be a bit "browy"; in short, one of those that the outsider will say shows the Crest-Bred.

Some people can see the Crest bred in every large Norwich that is put before them, and will contradict you point blank, although you may have bred the bird, and are able to show the pedigree for several generations. I am not saying out-crosses have never been used in building up our bird, but it is not necessary to use these now.

The Crest-Bred-cum-Lancashire bogey is one of the greatest of the fallacies that the Fancy has to contend with, and the man who recommends such a cross is either wilfully throwing dust in the eyes of his fellow-breeders or is suffering from an unhealthy imagination. Take the head of the Norwich and that of the Lancashire. In the former it should be round and neat, in the latter broad and sulky-looking, while the head of the Crest-bred must carry abundance of broad feather well down the poll, and be well browed. Did you ever see such a contradiction?

The body of the Crest-bred does not compare with the Norwich, while the feathers at the side of the body, and at the vent, are absolutely opposed to a good Norwich. The wings and tail, too, are longer than we require. But if this be true in the C.B., it is doubly so in the Lancashire. What a tail! Falling down between the legs, to say nothing about the open space above, immediately beneath the wings. What length of body and semi-upright position, both totally antagonistic to our aim! No, I cannot believe that any person recommending these crosses has made a study of their shortcomings, or, if he has, why does he not give to the Fancy his whole experience? We have the Yorkshire fancier openly admitting he has bred good show Yorkies from a quarter or an eighth Belgian, but where do you find the Norwich man who states such and such winning Norwich was bred by him from a quarter Lancashire, or that at such and such time he introduced an out-cross? Browy heads and droop tails can be bred without recourse to either the Crest-bred or the Lancashire, and he who can see nothing but foreign blood in these faults is lacking in originality and common sense.

Size; and How to Get It.

The breeding of large stock Norwich is not a difficult matter. It can be accomplished by double buffing, pairing with large birds for one season, and the next season pairing a large double buff hen to the largest yellow cock in one's room. These, however, produce stock birds, rather than show specimens, but it is these stock birds which will maintain the size in any strain. I think it is a mistake to pair all our birds for show, and the fancier who can set apart one or two cages for building up material to strengthen some particular point he may be losing is the one who will attain his object first. It will also be easier for him to blend that material with his other stock than to get improvement by purchasing here or there a bird the particular characteristics of which he knows little about, and which he is more or less compelled to accept on its face value.

Quality we must have, and I find that we get this mostly from the hen; for preference a medium or small one. You may ask what Proposed Cage Bird Society for Ystalyfera and Dist.

Sir,—We, the undersigned, along with many other fanciers, have felt the need of forming a C.B.S. here. Will readers of Cage Birds interested communicate with us, so that the society can be formed immediately, as we desire, if possible, to hold a members' young bird show.

Eight Young Rollers in Seven Weeks.

Sir,—I have a pair of British-bred Roller Canaries which have hatched two nests of young ones, eight in all, within seven weeks. The first lot were hatched on April 12, the second on May 29. There are six cock birds among them, and all are doing well. I have kept other breeds, but none so quick to rear and feed themselves as Rollers. With the exclusion of German supplies from our markets now is the opportunity for anyone to keep these youngsters.

To Hurry Up Hen Bullfinches.

Sir,—Would one of your numerous readers kindly tell me how to feed hen Bullfinches during moult and the winter so as to get them into breeding condition early—say, March or April—as my hens are always so late, it being the middle of July before they start nesting.

Novice.

[We should be glad to insert the experiences of our readers for the information of our correspondent. At the same time, we would point out that in a state of nature Bullfinches are late breeders, and we think it would be a difficult task to bring captive Bullfinch hens into breeding condition during March or April.—Editor Cage Birds.]

The Breast Colour of Caged Linnets.

Sir,—I see "E.G." would like some observations from readers as to the breast colour of the common Linnet. I have netted many in my time, and have caught some just showing the tinge of red on the breast, and in the spring these have come out blood red. I really think it is the wild seeds they get when they are moulting in the fields, because when you give them a house moult they lose it. I enlisted into the Army last September, so gave up birds for a while. I am now back from France, having been wounded in the left shoulder by shrapnel in the action at Ypres, May 5. I am going on fine after having been under an operation, and am convalescent at Highbury, at the late Mr. Joe Chamberlain's house, which has nice grounds. I am always pleased to get good old Cage Birds every Friday, as there is no paper to beat it.

Pte. E. Sadler, 1st Norfolks.

Another Fertile Hybrid Reported.

Sir,—I am pleased to tell you that one of our members, Mr. Robert Duncan, has been successful in hatching a young bird from a Norwich hen and a cock Goldfinch Mule. It hatched on June 23, and is now five days old and doing well. As I have never heard of such a cross before I thought it right to let you know, wishing Cage Birds every success.

[In reference to the letter from Mr. Norman published in our issue of June 26, Mr. Norman forwards a letter he has received from Mr. Meek to the effect that the hybrids mentioned therein were bred from a Twite-Greenfinch cock and a hen Canary, not from a Twite-Canary cock as stated.—Editor, Cage Birds.]

Sir,—I was very pleased to note the letter in Cage Birds last week, under heading of "C.B. in the Dardanelles," from Mr. Raper. On behalf of the members of the Manchester and N.C.O.S., I beg to thank Mr. Raper for his kindly remembrance, and I am confident I am expressing the sincere wish of all our members in hoping that Mr. Raper will be amongst us again in the near future as well and hearty as he left us. If this note should reach him, I wish to point out that his name is still on the books of the M. and N.C.O.S. as a free member, and I have no doubt that on his return he will find a few Norwich fanciers in Manchester ready to help him to get together a fresh start in the hobby

Breeding Bullfinches in Captivity.

Sir,—In answer to Mr. Stanley Dare re Bullfinches breeding in confinement, I may say that I have hatched them but failed to rear them. The father of my birds was the tame Bullie mentioned in my article last week, and the mother was a field-moulted bird caught just before Christmas (three years ago). They were in an outdoor aviary, quite a small one, together with the following, all cocks: Bramblefinch, Greenfinch, Goldfinch, Linnet, and Redpoll. I put in an old Blackbird's nest, which the hen re-lined. She laid four eggs, three of which hatched, and I think the young birds would have been reared had it not been for the other occupants, but unfortunately they only lived a week. Although the hen was field-moulted she would let me touch her when sitting.

Ralph Blake.

P.S.—In my article the cage for fresh-caught Chaffinches should read 2ft. x 18 inches x 6 high, not 16 as printed.

The Norwich Plainhead and How to Improve it.

Sir,—I thank Mr. Allsopp for his compliment. Very likely there are some Yorkshires that would improve the head properties quite as much as the muling hen we heard about a few weeks ago. As regards the Lizard cross, I can assure him that he would be more likely to get the small beak he makes so much of than by the Crest cross he recommends. It is a revelation to me to know our friend can produce the ideal head without any trouble (let us see them). Personally, I want to produce something that will beat my neighbours on the show bench, and if I can do that, the effect is all right, and the progress is satisfactory; as long as they carry their feather to make their head appear ideal, that is enough for me, without pulling the feather out to see that their skull is right shape. Mr. Allsopp defies me to name a cross that will improve the skull. My opinion is that if their head is of the right size and shape, the skull is all right. I have named the Crest for this purpose, and to prove my contention I will show six or seven, bred by myself, during the three seasons I have again taken up the hobby, against the same number he has bred from the time he has been in the Norwich Fancy. I should think this will be proof enough to satisfy Mr. Allsopp.

THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD.

is to become of the large hens. Personally, I never expect to breed show birds from large hens, unless such hens have come from a pair of birds mated for breeding show specimens. Large hens are very useful for breeding stock birds, and as I have said before this branch must not be overlooked.

Colour usually comes from the cock bird. I say usually, because unless a cock is colour-bred he cannot impart colour to his progeny. Who has not found sometimes that no matter what cock is paired to a certain hen the offspring are full of colour. I advise all breeders to use plenty of green blood, not that dull, flat green that one sometimes sees, but rich and bright—the colour that one sees on a good variegated yellow, the light parts of which shine like old gold burnished, or in a colour-fed buff like rich salmon. It is not sufficient to rely on colour-food alone to put on the colour; you must breed for it as well. I like one ticked or marked bird in each of my pairs.

In conclusion, let me ask you to be particularly careful what you put on the show bench. I know so and so likes a big one, and so and so likes a hot-coloured one; but don't pander to any individual too much. Let it be type first, type second, quality third, and then colour. Type paramount, for without this a Norwich is no Norwich, and however big, whatever the quality, and however bright the colour may be, we have lost our ideal—the bird of thick, chubby appearance, the "John Bull of the Fancy." If you do not approve of a judge's ideal ignore him. The matter is in your hands; don't send him stock birds, and in the end you will see he will give in.

Colour Feeding Without Eggs.

Sir,—With reference to E. Williams' query re colour food, I can tell him that there is no occasion to use eggs at all. What I did last year was to give all my birds a mixture of Spratt's Cod Liver Oil Food, with Ramsden's pepper. Scald the food with boiling water, add a spoonful of golden syrup at the same time, then mix a tea-spoonful of maw and gold of pleasure, and add the colour to suit, according to depth required. The food may also be made with a few old potatoes mixed into a stiff paste. Some of mine last year were like beet-roots in colour, and one took Ramsden's special at the Lambeth Baths Show for best colour fed in a class of 29. Sorry I have no Norwich this year, as I am only going in for Rollers, of which I have bred 40 from 5 pairs, all nice birds, doing well.

J. Taylor.

Sir,—In answer to Mr. Williams's request for a cheap way of making colour food without eggs, I am sending my own method. I have between 70 and 80 birds to colour-feed this year, and as eggs are so dear I have not used them. As soon as the young were able to peck up, I got three and a-half pounds of Spratt's Chicken Meal, which cost 9½d. I take a breakfast-cupful of the meal, put it into a basin with two table-spoonfuls of sugar, and add the red pepper. I mix up in a dry state, then add boiling water until it is damp through, and put a saucer over the top to keep the steam in until soft (it will swell a lot). Just before giving it to the birds I sprinkle a little maw seed in. I have not used anything else myself this year, and my birds are coming out a splendid colour. Any fancier can come and see my birds by appointment. Wishing Cage Birds every success.

W. T. Manning.

712, Romford Road, Manor Park.

Sir,—Seeing in last week's Cage Birds a reader asking if he could colour-feed his stock without the use of eggs, I may say, after twenty years of egg and biscuit, with bread for a change, I have given up the use of eggs altogether, and I find I have stronger and more robust youngsters by the use of cod liver oil food mixed with a cake I make myself. Your correspondent should try the following: Take 3½lbs. best white flour, ½-lb. linseed meal (buy the linseed meal from the chemists, you will get it better), 1oz. baking soda, 1½oz. of cream of tartar, 1lb. pure lard, 1lb. soft sugar. Put the lard into a clean basin, along with the sugar, and with your hand beat them into a white cream; the more you beat, the lighter the cake will be. Mix the soda and cream of tartar well through the flour and linseed meal; put all into the basin, and make into a paste with milk (sour milk will do) and put into two flat tins to bake. I should advise him to send it to the bakers to cook, as they make a better job of it than one can do with a cooking range. Have the cake well baked, cut it into slices about ½-in. thick, and put into the oven to dry; do not have the oven too hot, you want to dry it right through, so as to be able to grate it into meal and store away in air-tight tins for use. Take the quantity you require for your stock, moisten it down with warm water, and mix the colour into it, and you can take my word for it your birds will eat it without any trouble, and come through the moult strong and healthy with a bloom on their feathers like silk. If the above is too large a quantity, the amounts may be halved.

Birds in the Firing Line.

An Interesting Letter from a Soldier Reader.

Sir,—Just a few lines hoping to find you and all the staff in the very best of health. I am glad to say at the present I am "in the pink," but a bit lonely without my birds. I hope the boys are all having a good breeding season, and that the shows are still holding on. The birds out here seem to be a bit rougher in plumage than those at home, and the Canaries all seem to be a bit dirty; I have not seen a clean Canary yet, but they all sing very well. I was billeted next to a house where the woman kept eight Canaries, and they had all got red mite, so I put them right for her and they are now singing grandly. The Blackbird and Thrush do not seem to sing so nicely as in England; Yellow-hammers are plentiful, and Larks are singing grandly. By the way, about three weeks ago I happened to go about thirty yards to the back of our trench, and there I found a nest of Larks about a week old. Although the shells were falling all around them, the parent birds were dropping about ten yards away from the nest, creeping up to the young, and feeding them as if nobody was near.

I am now in a billet for a day or two's rest, and the Swallows have nests just against the door where a shell has bored a hole through the wall. I can reach them very easily, and they take no notice of us. Magpies are very plentiful, and in one of the trees in a row at Rouge Croix there is a nest in one tree which has been nearly blown up by a shell. The only bird I have not yet seen in the trenches is the lovely little Bob Robin; I have never seen him in France except once, and that was 200 miles from the trenches. Sparrows are still busy building in the old houses and trees. They seem to be bigger than ours, but the cock is not so bright in colour. Brown Linnets are in good song, but seem to be rather scarce around the firing lines. The Cuckoo takes no notice of our guns; he is always on the go.

I have Cage Birds sent to me every week from home, and pass my copy along when I have read it. If you have a few spare copies, I shall be glad if you would kindly forward them so that I can give them to the boys. That was a fine picture of a Blackbird in the last copy I received, and does very great credit to your artist, Mr. Norman. I might say that when I joined I had to part with all my birds (over 300), but I hope to start again if I return safely.

More Twin Canaries.

Sir,—I thought you would be interested to know that on June 6 I had the pleasure of having two young Canaries hatched from one egg, and as I have never heard of a similar instance, I should like to know if it is a solitary case. The hen is a Norwich, and has already brought up four birds this season, after which she laid four eggs in the bottom of the cage, which were smashed as I drew out the bottom. I then took her first brood away from her and gave her a new nest, and the following week she laid four more eggs, the first of which produced the twins mentioned. I had cleaned the cage out the day previous, and saw the four eggs in the nest; the next morning there were the two birds hatched, and the remaining three eggs. She has now four birds living, one egg not being fertile. I may state I do not remove the eggs as they are laid, and I have very good luck with them, but as I thought this was a unique instance, I would let you know of it. I may say several saw the twin birds before the other three eggs were hatched.

Where the Sun Does the Hen's Work.

Sir,—While bathing in the river Kanhan, about a mile from our barracks, Kamptee, Central India, one of our sergeants of H Company The Buffs found the eggs of a Waterfowl (Mughabi) alongside the river bank, laid on the sand. He took the eggs back with him, and placed them on his rifle rack alongside his bed. This morning, after nearly three weeks, we had a surprise; one of the eggs had hatched out, and another was pipped. Have you heard of anything similar to this? The eggs had been handled freely by several of us during the three weeks, and all the assistance they had was the sun shining on them during the day through the window. The parents of these birds are much like the English Snipe, but larger and greyer in colour. The temperature of the room is a good bit over 100 degrees; during the day at times it is 117 and 118 degrees. We have several Mynahs round our bungalows, and they seem fairly tame; they will start building next month, June, when the monsoons start. The weather here at present is rather warm, it being from 117 to 120 in the shade, so you can guess this wants a bit of sticking; most of the younger soldiers from this station have been sent up on the hills on account of the heat. I should like to write you a long letter about the birds of Kamptee, which are very plentiful. There are plenty of small birds of the size of the Robin, and with the same habits, but black and glossy, with about two white patches in the centre of the first flight feathers. We call them Black Robins, and very perky they are, as saucy as our own Redbreasts. I miss Cage Birds very much, and must make arrangements to have it sent out. I had the luck this morning to find a Mynah's nest in the roof of the skittle alley in the R.A. lines. It was built of pieces of newspaper with war pictures on them, old pieces of blotting paper, twigs, and dead leaves. I should be glad of advice as to caging and feeding young Mynahs.

G. W. Moy.

[Mr. Page has answered your query as to the keeping of Mynahs, and you will find his reply in our query columns. We shall be very glad to receive your notes on the birds of Kamptee, for we are sure they would interest our readers.—Editor Cage Birds.]

Will members turn up at next meeting, July 18, to confirm same. Our late chairman, Mr. R. Peart, is going to run for the management board, and it was decided to give him our support, so please don't forget to rally round a popular fancier.—R. Hutchinson, Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Mr. G. J. Slade has given me a challenge cup for our young bird shows for the best youngster shown, to become the property of a member winning it three times in succession or four times in all. I have also decided to give a medal to the best foreign bird at F.F. show.—W. L. Page, Hon. Sec.

CHESTER-LE-STREET C.B.S.

Meeting June 19, Mr. Stanger chair, before a good turn-up of membe s. Schedule for N.F. show was completed with 19 classes. Decided to add 1s. to the entrance money in each class. Mr. W. T. Smith, South Shields, was elected judge. Members elected: Meers, Towers, Dagg, Arnold, Young. Next meeting July 17, N.F. show night.—R. Ward, Sec.

Decided to hold annual show Nov. 13, a week after our old date. Judges nominated: Messrs. A. Holden, J. Riseboro, T. Dixon, J. Hands, and H. Seely. Members and intending members turn up at next meeting to select judge.—W. Cresswell, Sec.

ANNFIELD PLAIN C.B.S.

Meeting June 19, Mr. Hutchinson chair. Decided to have no young bird show, as members have had a poor season. W. Kilty was made a member. We are getting new members very well this year, but would like to see some of the old members turn up to push the show forward. The members agree to Mr. Peart's offer instead of getting a new cup, but please turn up and let us have a good meeting next time.—W. Thompson.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

BARROW C.B.A.

Meeting, June 16, Gardner's Restaurant, A. Hudson presiding, and a fair turnout of members present. Everything looks in favour of a record N.F. show this year. Almost three thousand tickets are in circulation, and going well in support of Tommy's Tobacco Fund; members rally round and give us a large entry. Decided to hold a special meeting July 7, the Wednesday before the show, when entries will be taken, so keep this date in mind.—D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, June 24, headquarters, "Seven Stars," John's Lane, Wolverhampton, Mr. Willows presiding over a moderate attendance. Members elected: Mr. W. Powell, Mr. Broadbent. The chairman, Mr. Willows, gave a splendid paper on the training of the Roller Canary for exhibition, which was full of practical knowledge, the members present declaring that it was by far the best paper they had had the pleasure of listening to, the speaker treating upon all details from the nest to the show bench. Members absent missed a treat. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Willows closed a very pleasant evening.—J. W. Thomson.

MANCHESTER AND N.C.O.S.

Meeting, Deansgate Hotel, June 21. (Members please note that this meeting was not announced in CAGE BIRDS, owing to the announcement being delayed in post; the Editor kindly sent letter of explanation re same.) There was a fair attendance, and two new members were elected. Sec. was instructed to write to several halls for terms re our open show. Judges were nominated. These matters will be settled next meeting, members please attend. This year we intend to engage specialist judges for each variety as far as possible. There is an error in the wording of competition for team medal in N.F. show schedule. Each team of four will be judged as a team, and not the highest points to count as stated.—F. Hayward, Hon. Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting June 26. As the sec. has gone to serve his King and country, Mr. James Slanger has taken his place till he returns, and Mr. R. Ward was elected chairman. We arranged classes for annual show; 7 Ncr, 7 C.B., 7 Yorks, 7 Bord., Can. A.O.V., Mule or Hyb., 2 Linnet, Goldf. or Bullf., Greenf., Redpoll, Siskin or Twite, Bunting, Hen Brit., A.O.V. Seedeater, Softbill, For. single or pair. We have altered our date from Nov. 6 to suit a few members in other sections, and have left date open until next meeting. Our schedule for next show read: 12 o'clock; members please try and get at 11 o'clock, so as to get the judge started at 12. I hear there are plenty of good birds bred in the district, and we have a lot of novices' classes to suit young fanciers. We want a lot of members now; there are 40 classes for a members' show. Come and get your birds tried.—J. Stanger, Sec.

SHETTLESTON C.B.C.

Meeting, Good Templars' Hall, Main St., June 12, Mr. E. Taylor chair. Judges fixed for annual show, Crests, Nor., and Scotch Fancy, A. Chalmers, Kirkintilloch; Yorks, Bord., and A.O.V., R. Heggie, Stepps; remainder, R. V. Raine, Cathcart. J. Dobson was proposed for membership. Final arrangements were made for F.F. show, July 10, in above hall, a most suitable place and comfortable for visiting fanciers. Classes for British birds will be provided. Fanciers desirous of becoming members should communicate with sec.—S. F. Wood, Sec., 4, Tolleross Road, Parkhead, Glasgow.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD C.B.A.

Meeting, June 26, Mr. Gardner in the chair. Arrangements for young bird show, July 10th, Mr. Gardner judge; list of specials was drawn up. Sec. stated that a number of subs. were unpaid, owing doubtless to the war, but he had a balance of 25s. in hand. Last year 45s. was voted to the special prize fund. Resolved to withhold that grant altogether this year, and appeal to the members. Enough has already been promised to provide a small special for each class, without touching the general funds, thus leaving the society in a far better position to stand the strain of war times, and to "keep the flag flying." Two new members were elected.

CINNAMON-MARKED Y.C.C.

Meeting, June 26, Mr. Morrison (pres.) in the chair. Owing to the sec. sending out postcards late, there was only a poor attendance. Sec. read applications of 16 societies for club's patronage. Decided to have 10 shows only for open or champion and amateur sections, the novice section to run through Yorks. Union novice classes where two classes are provided for cinn. marked Yorks. The following societies were granted patronage: Shipley O.S., Bradford West, Tong, Sheffield, Huddersfield, Bradford National, Windhill, Gt. Horton, Bradford East, Halifax. The value of the competition prizes was fixed as last year; for full particulars members must look to their handbooks, which will be to hand shortly. Any member whose sub. is owing for last year must let me know if he wants his name in book, and members who have changed their addresses should let me know as early as possible.—R. Garnet, Sec.

PRESTON O.S.

First ramble of the season, June 6. We trained to Brock and walked through Brock Bottoms, one of the beauty spots of this part of Lancashire. The young trout, jumping out of the water, afforded quite a treat for some of us, who had not seen them before. We continued our walk until we arrived at Seeds Mill, where we stayed while one of our members took some photos of the surrounding scenery. Taking the main road to Inglewhite, we kept a good look-out for birds' nests, but we did not have much luck, as the country is not adapted for many kinds of birds. At the Green Man in Inglewhite we had luncheon, and after a rest of about an hour, we took the road to Chipping. Continuing our way through Thornley, we arrived at Longridge, and took train to Preston, all having enjoyed the outing. We had as our guide our chairman, Mr. T. Dent, who is also the chairman of the Norwich Plainhead Club, and we have to thank him for his kindness.—G. Buck, Hon. Sec.

EASTLEIGH C.B.S.

First country ramble June 13. There was a very good muster, and grand weather prevailed. A start was made from the station at 9.30 a.m., and ten minutes' walk found us studying our feathered friends. By way of the river we made good headway, meeting with warblers of all species too numerous to mention. Several Reed Buntings were seen, and some Wagtails. Among the various Hardbills were Chaffinches, young and old, Greenfinches, Bullfinches, Yellow Buntings, and Goldfinches; all met within a hundred yards. Next we were favoured with the song of the Whitethroat, and we managed to get a good view of this proud little bird. Several nests were found containing eggs of Blackbird, Thrush, Hedgesparrow, Shrike, and Long-tailed Tits, and young of Hedgesparrow, Blackbird, Thrush, and numerous others. Mr. E. Cook made a good guide, and is always ready to lead the way whenever a ramble is arranged. Our company made a good collection of wild seeds, and altogether we spent a splendid morning, arriving back at the station at 1.30 in time for our Southampton friends to catch their train, filled with a considerable knowledge of bird life, and a good appetite. Next ramble July 4. Friends are invited to join.—J. Alderslade.

GLASGOW AND WESTERN COUNTIES NOR., ETC., CLUB.

The weather clerk was on his very worst behaviour but no less than sixteen took part in the club's first ramble of the season to Bridge of Weir. The party wended their way through the village, one of the most beautiful in the West of Scotland, and reached the glen through which the Gryffe flows slowly to the Cart, which in course reaches Glasgow's great river, the Clyde. In this beautiful glen the afternoon's treat began. Willie Jack was the first to spot a nest, a Greenfinch's with three eggs. Pursuing the narrow pathway Bill Jamieson managed to get his eye on a Whitethroat's with eggs, and in the next 100 yards we were in the thick of it—a Mavis with four young, another with four eggs, and a Blackbird with five eggs came under the keen and critical eye of Jamie Findlay. "Peeping Peter" had been very quiet up to this point, and we knew there was something on. A professional photographer was one of the party, and 'P.P." had been on the lookout for a suitable spot in which to "take" the company. A halt was made in close proximity to the wood, and here the company posed to the "knight of the camera." At the entrance of the wood the company split up into small sections, some making for the interior, some taking the high road, and others the banks of the Gryffe, which are thickly planted, and afford excellent covert for the bird life that abounds in the district. The Blackbird's golden bill is ever busy pouring forth his love song to his sombre coloured mate; the voice of the Throstle is heard; while the Lark is singing lustily in the blue vault of heaven, showering his merry music drops o'er meadow and moor. When the parties had reunited, particulars of the afternoon's "kill" were reported. Mr. Jamieson reported a Waterhen's nest in a bush on the banks of the river Gryffe with seven eggs almost due; Mavis, four young; Greenfinch, five eggs; and a Chaffie's under construction. Mr. Findlay saw a Blackbird's with five eggs and a ripe nest of Song Thrushes. "Peeping Peter" had quite an interesting story to tell; he saw Blackbirds and Mavis ready for the wing and with nests of eggs, and was also fortunate enough to come across a Wheatear's with five eggs of a pale blue colour, not so dark as those of the Hedge Sparrow; he also saw nests of the Linnet and Grey Wagtail, the former with four eggs and the latter with two. After strolling along the banks of the river the company came upon all sorts of nests, which proved both interesting and instructive. Later in the week Messrs. Jack and Dinwoodie furnished the writer with particulars of their afternoon's sport; nests in the wood were very plentiful and varied, and amongst the many seen were: Mavis with young about three days old; another with five youngsters ready to start life's handicap, and one with four eggs; Yellowhammer's, six eggs; Chaffinch's, five eggs; Greenfinchs', with five, three, and two eggs respectively; Blackbird's, four eggs; and many nests in the making. By way of a change, sports were held, the racing being keen and the finishes close:—100 yards handicap: 1, Fitzpatrick, scratch; 2, Findlay, 5yds.; 3, Jamieson, 12yds. Three-legged race: 1, Hagan and Hewitt, 5yds.; 2, Findlay and Jamieson, 8yds.; 3, Fitzpatrick and Adam, scratch. (After a dead heat for second place, which was rerun, the latter coming to Mother Earth.) Walking Race: 1, Fitzpatrick; 2, Jamieson; 3, Findlay. 150yds.: 1, Findlay; 2, Adam; 3, Fitzpatrick; 4, Jamieson. After resting our wearied limbs for a brief space in a tidy country ale-house, which for cleanliness and comfort would have pleased the most fastidious, we took rail for Glasgow, and wended our way to our respective domiciles.—J. H. Adam, Sec.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

QUESTIONS OF DIET (New Reader).—(1) If you keep together two species that require different diet, you can only give a combination of the two diets and trust to luck that one will not consume more than is good for it of the other's food. If you keep the Roller with the Siskin Mule, the best combination of your present diet would be one part each of canary and summer rape, and half a part of teazle. In addition, you would give separately a pinch of the usual tit-bits, and green foods, and wild seeds occasionally. (2) For the hens in the flights a staple of plain canary seed only is best. In addition, give a small allowance—say, a teaspoonful to each three birds—of egg food, or its equivalent in bread and milk once a week, and on one other day each week a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet and broken groats. Give a fair supply of green food or wild seeds, as they come in season, three or four times a week.

TROUBLE WITH YOUNG (Blaina).—(1) I am rather inclined to think that the trouble with your young birds is that you are apt to dose them too readily. See that the cages are kept scrupulously clean, and strewn with gritty sand, and that they are not too much exposed to direct draughts, and then try what the following treatment will do for them in the course of two or three weeks, and if they are not all right in that time, please write again, repeat particulars, and I will advise you further. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed, and place on top of it each morning a teaspoonful (heaped) of summer rape for each group of birds. Each morning give a teaspoonful of egg or biscuit food sprinkled with maw for each four birds. This may be varied with an equivalent amount of bread and milk now and again. In the afternoon throw out any soft food that may be left, wash out vessel, and give a similar allowance of a mixture of equal parts, hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give a few plantain stalks, or seed heads of shepherd's purse, or a few sprays of seedy chickweed four times a week. Add 20 drops of fluid magnesia to each ounce of drinking water every second day for a week, and after this give instead six drops each of tincture of gentian and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week. Be careful to see that your hemp is quite good and sound in the kernel. (2) I consider castor oil too drastic for young birds. You also need to be sure what you are treating them for. (3) You only mention the length of the cages, so I cannot say definitely how many they will accommodate. But with close attention to cleanliness you might safely keep eight in each. (4) Here again you give only the length—50 ins.—so I can only say that, roughly, you might keep nine or ten birds in it.

A DUET (W. J. B.).—It depends upon the temperament of the hen whether the cock may safely be removed at any time during the period of incubation. Some hens, if allowed to sit a few days before the cock is removed, will, if he is then taken away, leave the nest and absolutely refuse to return to it, until the cock is returned. It is therefore, best to avoid the possibility of this trouble arising by removing him when she is being put to sit in every case where his removal is desirable. (2) In all cases where one succeeds well with a certain method of management it is the wisest policy to adhere to that method and avoid all innovations. Hemp is unquestionably a very valuable food for rearing young birds, but one can have too much of a good thing. The chief objection to its too free use is that it is apt to force the parents to start nesting again too early and neglecting the young; and one needs to be very watchful of the condition of this seed when it is being used at all liberally, as when the kernel is unsound the results are disastrous. Many succeed excellently by using it quite freely, and I have done so myself, but there are also many who make a stumbling-block of it; therefore, the average novice is best advised to exercise moderation in its use.

W. S. and A.H.—Replied to by post.

CAUSE OF EGG-BINDING (T. Moon).—This distressing trouble may arise from a variety of causes, such as over-feeding, or too fat condition of body, general weakness, or an abnormal condition of the oviduct. You might try the following treatment in any future case of necessity. In addition to your general treatment, give a little green food daily, any kind except dandelion, and when the hens are coming forward for nesting give every second day a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, and millet. Keep a piece of cuttlefish hung in the cage, and get a little old mortar and smash it up to a coarse powder and strew this freely on the sand on the floor of the cage. In severe cases you may try the effect of ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the drinking water daily for three days, and follow this up with ten drops of syrup of lacto-phosphate of lime and iron in the water every second day for a week or two before a hen is expected to commence laying. Allow as much space as is convenient for the hens to get vigorous exercise, and offer the bath daily.

SPECIMEN OF PLANT, ETC. (D. J. W.).—(1) You might try what the following treatment will do for the Roller cock in the course of a month or so, and if it is not well in that time, please write again, and repeat particulars and say what progress has been made, and I will advise you further if necessary. Better remove it from the greenhouse, and keep it in some place where the temperature is less subject to violent fluctuations. Let it have plenty of fresh pure air, but avoid direct draughts, a dusty atmosphere, or the proximity of burning lights, and do not hang it high up near the ceiling. Give a staple diet of a simple mixture of three parts canary, by measure, to one part summer rape. In addition, give a small teaspoonful of mixed seed twice a week, and a little green food in variety daily. Every third day for a month give also a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and well sprinkled with maw seed. In the drinking water add every second day for a week six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and every second day after this give instead five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre. (2) I do not consider the fluid you name of any practical use for ridding cages or appliances of red mites. Essence of quassia, carbolic fluid, fir tree oil, and a variety of other things prepared for this purpose are far more efficacious and practicable. You might have seen the details for dealing with the pest in this column very frequently. (3) The specimen of weed you send is not shepherd's purse, but the narrow-leaved plantain, called also lamb's tongue, and ribwort in some places. Still, it is an excellent wild seed for Canaries, and they are particularly fond of it. By comparison, shepherd's purse has a much finer and thread-like seed stalk, the seed vessels are flattened capsules, and practically triangular in shape, and are carried on fine thready footstalks a little distance from the main stem, and the seed pods are set a little distance apart on the main stem, and not crowded all together, as is the case with the plaintains.

CEASED FEEDING (Owen Hughes).—You make no mention of green food at all, and if you did not give any this may very probably be the cause of the hen ceasing to feed the young. A little crisp young lettuce, chickweed, or the tender tips of young groundsel given on the morning of the fourth day might easily have saved the situation, and may have kept the hen at her duties. If she goes to nest again, leave the cock with her, and adhere strictly to the advice given in the handbook, "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which has been sent you. Also read up the many replies which have appeared dealing with this subject in this column in the last month or so, and then, if anything goes wrong, you should be able to do what is best under the circumstances.

COLOUR FEEDING CRESTS (J.W.).—(1) It will be no detriment whatever to your Crests and Crestbreds for showing if you colour-feed them. The only effect, if any, is likely to be a little advantage to them rather than otherwise. The extra amount of exercise they will get from running with the Norwich during the moult will be wholly beneficial, and as the colour feeding can do no harm, there can be no objection at all to your doing as you suggest. (2) It is only necessary to cut off the ends of the crest at the sides, just in front of the eyes, while breeding. This does not affect the future growth or development of the crest after the moult. (3) Taken on the whole, I should say that the Crested was not quite so prolific as the Norwich, but this is very much a question of strain; there may be many highly bred strains of Norwich that are decidedly less prolific than some strains of Crested. What the latter lack in numbers would probably be much more than compensated by the increased value, if the birds were of good average quality. Sorry your letter arrived too late for reply to appear in last issue.

ROLLER HENS (H. A.).—(1) It is most probable that the green hen has developed some ovarian trouble, for which you can do nothing but let nature take its own course. I should not be surprised if you had found the hen defunct before this reply appears. If not, your best course is to separate her from the cock, turn her into a large cage or flight where she can get a fair amount of exercise, feed plainly for a week or two, giving a little bread and milk sprinkled with maw three times a week, and every second day for a week add to the water ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea. Do not give any dandelion at all to this hen, but give a little of some other green food daily. (2) You did wrong to attempt to introduce the two fresh hens to the same cage as the other pair; you should have caged the hens separately and introduced the cock to them in rotation as the hens went to nest. (3) If I understand you rightly that you finally introduced the yellow hen to the cock on Wednesday, and she laid her first egg the following Saturday, there was ample time for all the eggs to be fully fertilised, and this is what I should expect from birds in good breeding condition. One word: don't dose your birds continually with drugs in the water.

DISPARITY IN AGE (C. G. Q.).—(1) The little difference in the ages of the youngsters owing to them hatching out on different days will make no difference at all to the treatment they require. Leave them with the parents until the youngest is capable of looking after itself a little. (2) For feeding the youngsters when removed from the parents, the food you name will do very well as sold, without the addition of any extra biscuit. Give it in the same manner as before removal for a few days afterwards, then gradually reduce the frequency, and next the quantity, as you notice them eating more freely the seed provided. Three weeks after removal a teaspoonful each morning for the three birds should be sufficient for their needs.

AN OCTAVE (New Beginner).—(1) The Roller-Yorks cross is a very good one for producing songsters, especially if you use a Yorkshire that comes from a good singing strain. If you train the young crossbred cocks under the Roller cock, they should make very decent performers. There is no reason why the eggs in the clutch should not be all fertile. (2) Diet is all right, but you might with advantage vary the green food supplied a little more. (3) July 4, if you removed the eggs and set them all at once on June 21. If you did not remove them, hatching will probably take place on successive days from July 1 to 4. (4) Yes, hard-boiled egg and crushed biscuit—plain, and not highly flavoured ones for preference—or even plain bread crumbs in the proportion of two parts biscuit or bread to one part egg, either with or without a sprinkling of maw, is sufficient to rear young from the egg. Green food should be added after the first two or three days. The little book advised below will give you all further details. (5) It is quite possible to colour feed young in the nest, but as it is not at all essential I do not advise you to attempt it at present. Begin to give a little weak colour food when the young are from five to six weeks old, as a preparation for the proper colour feeding during the first moult. (6) It is too late to begin feeding the cock which has already commenced casting feathers. You could, of course, feed him, but the feathers now being produced would show no material effect of the colour food. If many feathers have been cast, the effect would be a "patchy" bird; if only a few, the effect would not be so noticeable. Colour feeding proper must begin a week or two before any feathers are cast. (7) The room you describe should answer admirably for breeding, but when moulting and colour feeding you should keep the blind down before the window to tone down the light a little. (8) "Canary Breeding for Beginners" is just the book you need, 7d., post free, or for information on separate breeds House's "Canary Manual," 1s. 2d., post free, both from our manager. For information on colour feeding, you should get the brochure on Colour Feeding, 3½d., post free, also from this office.

WEANING YOUNG (Crest).—After removing the young from the parents, keep them in a moderate-sized cage by themselves for a week or two in order that they may gain a little strength and skill in getting about and taking care of themselves before you place them in a large cage with old birds. It will be best not to give a lot of succulent greenstuff for a week or two after they are removed, but this does not necessarily mean that it should be totally avoided. A small spray of seedy chickweed, or the usual wild seed heads, or plantain stalks in moderation, can do no harm. The point is, not to give coarse over-succulent greenery, nor sufficient quantity for it to get stale in the cages, or be left lying about the cage floor. Just now the seed heads of the narrow-leaved plantain are in fine condition for use, and form a most excellent green food for young birds. When the young are first removed from the parents you may give as a substitute for green food a little scalded summer rape each day, or a little less often if you wish. Continue giving a little egg food daily until they are eating the dry canary seed quite freely.

IRREGULAR LAYING (D.W.).—Without details of your feeding and management generally, I cannot arrive at a conclusion as to the cause of the irregular laying. As it is, I cannot even tell whether you have the birds mated or not. If they are not yet mated that would be quite sufficient to account for the casual laying. On the other hand, if they are mated it is probably due to some error of management on your part. Also if not mated now it is getting too late for any chance of doing any good with them this season. In mating up birds it is best to select, as far as possible, birds over a year old as mates for those bred in the last season, though this is not essential, and the principle can be varied to suit the needs of the stock at command. But it is always best to avoid mating together two very young, or immature, birds whenever possible. If you have not yet mated them, and they are keen on nesting, you may, if you choose, give them a chance by mating them at once on the above lines. It is just possible they may get to work quickly and succeed in bringing off one brood before the moult commences. For the details of management you cannot do better than get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager would send you for 7d., post free.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

TRYING FOR BRAMBLEFINCH - CANARY HYBRIDS.—Up to the present this cross has not been produced, though I have heard of fertile eggs both from the Bramble and the Chaffinch with the Canary hen. I am unable to say with certainty about the fertility of the single egg laid by your hen. As a rule, these isolated specimens do not prove fertile. The reason is that a hen which lays only one egg is not in proper breeding condition; full clutches when obtainable are much more satisfactory. I would advise you to persevere; the cross will no doubt come some day, and your chance of success is quite as good as another's. (2) The egg was marked like the generality of Canary eggs. (3) The hen being young, and not in high condition, would account for her not laying regularly. She may do better another season.

TO REAR YOUNG GREENFINCHES (C. G. Quinton). If the young ones hatch, you must supply the old birds with egg-food to rear the little ones with. Boil a fresh egg for ten minutes, cool it under the water tap, and after removing the shell beat up with a fork, and add to it four Osborne biscuits. Thoroughly mix them, and if too dry a few drops of water or sweet milk will improve it. If you prefer it you can use half a slice of stale bread in place of a couple of biscuits. Soak the bread for half an hour in cold water, squeeze as dry as possible, and then use. This food should be freshly made twice a day. Give in addition plenty of wild food such as seeding chickweed, shepherd's purse, and grass, also the other food you are now using. As most of the birds in the aviary will help themselves to the egg food, you must see that the supply is kept up.

REARING LARK (Mermaid).—I fear you were doomed to failure from the first, by using a hen that you knew was a bad feeder. For the purpose, an exceptionally good feeder would be required, then I think you might succeed. I have known young Canaries hand-reared from the shell, but I must confess I should not be tempted to try to do it, although I have reared both large and small British birds, some of them from quite wee babies. (2) The food you speak of I have not tried, and I would advise you to use the best insectile mixture you can obtain, one specially made for Nightingales and small Warblers. You would be much more likely to be successful with it.

JAY, JACKDAW, OR MAGPIE (Allies).—Of the three birds the Magpie is my favourite, but I know good fanciers who prefer the Jay. They are scarcely indoor birds, and do better in a small aviary, near the kitchen door, where they see plenty of life. A large box cage would suit if you have no aviary, one about 3ft. long, with one good strong perch, and food and water vessels placed outside.

should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2, "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4, "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Birdrooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Moult British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

For method of feeding, see answer to others in this issue. Proper food for them can be purchased almost anywhere. Our Nutshell booklet, No. 26, 2½d. post free, from our office, would give you all the information you require upon the larger insectivorous birds.

SEX OF LINNET MULES (Puzzled).—In breeding mules the general rule is that more cock birds than hens are produced, but as there is no rule without exceptions, your birds may be what you state. From your letter, I should say that the three small yellow birds that do not sing are certainly hens. Cock birds would be now in stout song, in fact, singing like your buff bird. To make certain, I would advise you to cage them off separately and put them each in a separate room, and see if they open out. It sometimes happens that a very stout singer will silence the whole of the other birds, and they refuse to sing until he has gone off somewhat. If after this trial, you are still in doubt, keep the largest of the three and moult him out. In any case, yellow birds, cocks or hens, would naturally be smaller than buffs. I would advise you to have another try; you may have better luck next time, and turn out more cocks than hens.

BULLFINCHES DOING BADLY (H. M. Pratt).—I do not expect that your Bullfinches will regain their plumage until the moult, which should commence shortly. I would advise you to catch up one or both of your birds and examine them for insects. If they have any, hand wash them and place in a clean cage; keep them there for a few days, while the aviary is being cleaned and disinfected. If no insects, give the birds a little cooling medicine, such as Glauber Salts, as much as will cover a sixpence, dissolved in the drinking water; repeat in a couple of days. Add summer rape and teazle to the seed bill, and discontinue the linseed. Give half-a-dozen sunflower seeds daily, and reduce the hemp to half the quantity. Supply green food seeding grass, etc., abundantly. Let the birds bathe daily when the weather is suitable. I would advise you to procure our Nutshell Booklet on the Bullfinch, 2½d., post free, from our office, or twopence from your local newsagent; it would assist you in your management.

VARIOUS QUESTIONS (I. W.).—Elderberries are capital food for many birds, and should be used freely, while obtainable in a ripe condition. They can also be dried, by hanging the bunches on a line and suspending in the open air; if the weather is favourable, they will dry up, and can be used in this condition later, but you will find ordinary grocer's currants washed and dried answer the same purpose. (2) I do not think there is any "most suitable meal to feed mealworms with." I have seen them breed freely in middlings, barley meal, and flour but I am inclined to think there would be more feeding properties in the barley meal, or bran and barley meal mixed would do nicely; the bran would keep the meal open and prevent it clogging. (3) Although the Blackcap is not a particularly difficult bird to keep in confinement, I do not think you would be wise to attempt to breed with them. The difficulty with all Softbills is supplying them with suitable food to feed the young ones. In the early stages live food is an absolute necessity; the old ones will not touch anything else to feed the babies with. If you have a liberal supply of live ants' eggs, you might succeed, also give small caterpillars, flies, and any creeping things you could lay your hands on; at the same time supplying them with the best quality insectile food, with a liberal allowance of hard-boiled egg mixed in it.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

WAXBILL HYBRIDS (R. McK.).—You do not say what species of Waxbill your hen bird is. The only cross I know of having been reared in captivity in the British Isles is between the Gold-breasted Waxbill and Avadavat, of which several were reared. Supply your birds with a mixture of two parts white millet and one of canary seed. Keep a millet spray in the cage, and supply green food liberally, such as flowering and seeding grass, and any non-poisonous garden weeds. Grit and cuttlebone should also be continuously in the cage. Nutshells Nos. 16 and 20 would tell you all about the above, 2½d each post free from our manager.

MILLET SEED, &c. (K.F.).—(1) I think you have transposed the price you give, as red millet is the cheapest of all millets, and really is not worth buying, as many species refuse it. By "millet seed," white millet is understood, but both this and the Indian millet are good food values. New arrivals and young birds should always have a good supply of Indian millet. (2) Yes, the maggots you name can be used. Put them in fine sand in a very cool place to check pupation, and in three days sift all the sand away (with a wire or gauze sieve) and put the maggots in a fresh lot of sand, then in about another four days they will be ready for use. (3) Yes, whole oats are implied, but the coarse oatmeal will meet the case. (4) The Grey Java Sparrow is the wild species. The White variety has been produced very many years ago by careful selection, etc. (5) The seeds will keep if stored in a dry place and kept in dust and mouse-proof receptacles.

DOUBLE-FRONTED AMAZON (T.W.).—Many Parrots and Parrakeets show pen feathers on head, etc., when staged during the show season, but of course it would be no use staging a bird that was in ragged plumage from the moult. The variable temperature of a kitchen is not suitable to moult any kinds of birds well. A cooler room, even a room in which a fire never burned, would be better, so long as the temperature was not a fluctuating one. Try putting a few shreds of saffron in the water about mid-August. In the interim, put it out-of-doors for a few hours daily whenever the weather is warm enough, but do not subject it to cool winds nor place it in the way of a direct current of air.

FOREIGN BIRD QUERISTS

should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1½); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.) "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Acadacats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Warbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

GREY SINGING FINCH HYBRID (H. Kay).—A hybrid of which one parent is a foreign finch can neither compete in British Hybrids nor Canary-cross classes. You could only exhibit it in the Foreign Section at such shows which give a Hybrid or Rare-feathered class in this section. The London C.B.A. has given such a class for the last two or three seasons, and will probably do so again. In my opinion colour feeding would spoil it. The smartest bird of this cross I ever saw was white, heavily variegated with dark patches similar in colour to the plumage of the Grey Singing Finch.

PICKING ITSELF (T.B.D., Liverpool).—Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. Spray it with a tepid quassia solution two or three times a week. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water. Of course, if the voidings become watery-loose you must then give the magnesia less frequently. As it is accustomed to a little moistened food, you can lightly moisten a piece of bread or biscuit with chemical food and water. Confine its diet to seed mixture, nuts, ripe fruit (any kind it will take), green food, grit and cuttlebone. Keep a thickish piece of a branch of a tree in the cage for it to exercise its mandibles upon. I expect either parasites, or skin irritation, or both, is the cause. Persevere with the above treatment; improvement will not be rapid, and there may be relapses, but "keep at it." Report progress five or six weeks hence.

A FEATHER PULLER (Wheeler).—If you have not already got it, you should get our Nutshell, The Grey Parrot, 2½d., post free from our manager; it will give you full details of feeding and general treatment. Roughly, the dietary should be confined to seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, crusts of stale bread, pieces of biscuit, plain cake, etc., but do not give any tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Cuttlebone, grit (not sand), and a thick piece of a branch (for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon) should be continually in the cage. Continue to spray with the quassia solution, and give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day. If the voidings should become watery loose, then you must give it less frequently, say once a week. On the intervening days lightly colour the drinking water with Chemical Food. You will have to persevere, as recovery will not be rapid. A few hours in the open on warm days will do it good, but do not place it in a current of wind, the full glare of the sun, or expose it to N. or N.E. winds. Report progress five or six weeks hence.

WHAT PARRAKEET? (J. P. L.).—I regret I cannot give you the information you require, as your description is hopelessly incomplete, though your birds may be Orange-flanked Parrakeets. You must tell me approximate length of tail, colour of beak, flights, bare skin round eyes, and also describe any variation of the hue of green on head

KEEPING INDIAN MYNAHS (Scout, G. W. Moy)—The cage should be a roomy one. As you are in India, one of the native cane cages with the bottom consisting of bars of cane, the same as the sides and top, would serve your purpose. Of course, if kept in a room there must be the provision of a tray for the cage to stand in. For diet, supply ripe fruit, milk sop, boiled rice, a little of some good soft food mixture and live insects liberally; grasshoppers, beetles, flies, smooth caterpillars, etc., can all be given. The birds will as a rule reject obnoxious kinds. Your description of the nest in the roof of skittle alley is quite interesting; from Anglo-Indian friends I have had described many such nests of other species of birds, but not hitherto of one of this species. Birds will use any litter which prevails about any given spot and incorporate it into their nests, whether for adornment or concealment cannot be discussed in this column.

FOR HOT GREENHOUSE (J. B.).—You give me no idea what kind of birds you require, hard or softbills. A Greenhouse with a temperature of 70 to 80 degrees I assume that it is pretty regular at this temperature all the year round—will not suit many seedeaters, as the atmosphere would be too moist, but there are many beautiful little softbills yould could have if you subdivide the house into compartments. Sunbirds, Sugar Birds, and Zosterops, White-eyes, could be kept, also many beautiful Tanagers, of the genera Calliste, Euphonia, and Chlorophonia, but the numbers of these birds which could be kept together are not enumerous. In these troubled times you will have to acquire your birds as opportunity presents itself. There are few English birds that would survive such a temperature for long. If you mean to try seedeaters, then get such as Cordon Bleus, Firefinches, Dufresnes, Violet-eared and Black-faced Waxbills. If the above does not meet your need, please repeat query, stating explicitly what kind or groups of birds you have in mind, or convenience compels you to choose. A last word: if you must have seedeaters, you must manage somehow to ventilate freely without draught, so as to avoid excessive moisture.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and it

A. W. Grindley.—Pneumo-enteritis, inflammation of the bowels, with pneumonia as a sequel. Death from exhaustion, following this disease. It is evidently of dietetic origin, and the cause has to be sought for in the food.

W. H. Neath.—Inflammation of the bowels, probably due to change and increase of food.

Fred. Smith.—Pneumonia was the cause of death. The bird was very emaciated, and had been in poor condition some time. It was this that rendered it susceptible to illness. It is not infectious.

M. E. Sparling.—Death occurred from congestion of the lungs.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

W.B.B. We do not know of any seed bearing the name "Canthdrn." Are you sure about the spelling of the name? In any future enquiries kindly give your name and address in accordance with our rules at the head of the query columns.

F. E. Mather. You will probably have noticed that the matter to which you refer was fully dealt with in one of the answers to queries last week. We take it that this reply covers the points raised in your letter

AN ATTRACTIVE EXHIBIT.

Among the British Birds seen at our Exhibitions few attract more attention than a well-shown Fieldfare. The modest beauty of its colouration and the symmetry of its markings make it one of the most charming of all native birds. Our drawing is from a portrait by Mr. Norman of the fine specimen which won 2nd prize at Reading Show for its owner, Mr. D. J. Crawford, Llanelly.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

IMPORTANT.

Would Mr. Jas. Johnstone, Kilmarnock, kindly send his address to J. H. Adam, Sec., Glasgow and Western Counties Club, 15, Alexander Street, Sandyford, Glasgow?

Mr. G. T. Jones, Blaenavon, writes that he has resigned the secretaryship of Blaenavon C.B.S., and asks the members not to forget the young bird show fixed for to-day, July 10.

Who was the Glasgow fancier that stood reading the Wild Birds Protection Act in front of a provincial police station, when a young Song Thrush emerged from his pocket? Be more careful in future, William.

The London and Counties A.C.B. is holding a young bird show on July 17 at Victoria Hotel, Charterhouse Street, E.C., corner of Farringdon Road. The show opens at 6. Mr. G. Gardner will judge.

The partnership that has existed between Seely Bros. is now dissolved, and I shall exhibit in future as H. Seely and Sons. All letters re judging, schedules, etc., must be sent to the old address.—H. Seely, 22, Third Row, Choppington Colliery.

Who Owns These?

Mr. E. Norton, hon sec. Leeds C.B.S., 11, Edgware road, Bayswater-road, Roundhay-road, Leeds, writes that a raincoat and an umbrella were left in the show room at the young bird show, July 3. They will be restored to the owner or owners on application.

Owing to the flood of orders which I have been receiving, writes Mr. E. M. Stanton, Patricroft, I am compelled to notify intending customers that I cannot accept any orders for a week. We are working day and night to execute orders already on hand, and customers who are waiting can expect same being dispatched on or before July 12. My success is undoubtedly due to the great paper, Cage Birds, and I wish you every success.

The Law's Loss—the Army's Gain.

Last week news came from Jubbulpore that the Government had offered five commissions in the Indian Army to the 4th West Kent Regt., and that Mr. C. A. House's son, Fred, was one of thirty-four recommended. This week we hear that he has been fortunate enough to be one of the selected five. Young House joined the Queen's Own immediately after the outbreak of war, and left England with his regiment in October, having then the idea of returning to the law at the close of the war. Now, we suppose, he will make the army his profession, because the commission offered him is not a temporary one, as are many just now.

The frontispiece to the Avicultural Magazine, the Journal of the Avicultural Society, for July is a beautiful coloured drawing by Mr. Goodchild of the rare Mikado Pheasant, to illustrate an article by Mrs. Johnstone. A very interesting account is given by Dr. Lovell-Keays on the breeding of the African Zosterops, and the hon. editor, Mr. H. D. Astley, writes on "Cuckoos' Habits in the Breeding Season." Among the other articles are "My Humming Birds," by Mr. A. Ezra; "Economy and Mice," by Dr. A. G. Butler; "The Cotton Teal in Captivity," by Mr. H. D. Astley, etc., while Dr. E. Hopkinson continues the useful "English Names for the Parrots."

Kindly announce the postponement of our annual show to Nov. 17, writes Mr. G. E. Cragg, hon. sec. Welsh Northern Counties F. and F.A., Rocklands, Rhos, Colwyn Bay. The date originally fixed, Nov. 10, was found to clash with the Manchester fixture, and my committee felt that in these times it was not wise, in the interests of the Fancy generally, to clash with such an important fixture. As I am now preparing the draft schedule, I shall be glad to hear from any fancier who wishes to guarantee classes or offer specials.

The Extraordinary Fate of a House Sparrow.

WHAT is probably the most extraordinary fate that ever befel a bird happened recently to a common House Sparrow which tumbled into a tank of boiling sugar at a sweetmeat factory. When taken out of tank, the sugar crystallised on the bird in such a way that its plumage was totally covered with a glistening deposit, and the body was so rigid that it stood firmly on its feet while being photographed, with the result here seen.

In kindly forwarding this unique curiosity, the sender, Mr. W. J. Smith, writes as follows:—"Knowing that you are interested in the happenings of our birdy pals, I am sending you a Sparrow that got in the crystallising tank at the works, with the result you will see. I have seen some of the foreigners come over covered nearly as thickly as this with ice and snow, but never one that has been "sugared" as this one, and though you give us from time to time accounts of many strange things birds do, I think this is somewhat out of the ordinary."

The leading article in the July issue of "British Birds," Messrs. Witherby and Co., High Holborn, one shilling monthly, is on the moulting changes of plumage in British ducks. There is a long list of marked birds which have been recovered through Messrs. Witherby's ringing scheme, and the usual interesting "Notes" are also included in the issue.

OBITUARY.

MR. C. McCANN (Lurgan).

I regret to inform you of the death, on June 28, of Mr. Chas. McCann, writes Mr. J. Lavery, of Lurgan. He was well and favourably known, both as a dealer and, locally, as an exhibitor. His many friends will regret his early death, and the Fancy here is the poorer.

A Hen with a Grand Record.

I was pleased to have an illustration of my yellow Norwich hen, 1st at the Horticultural Hall, on the front page of Cage Birds, writes Mr. J. Thomas, Ambler Thorn. This hen has done a considerable amount of winning at the principal shows, including, in addition to the London C.B.A., Crystal Palace, Manchester, Doncaster, Huddersfield, Gateshead, Welsh National, and several others. She is still in splendid condition, and is a prolific breeder. She has already had three nests this season, and the youngsters include some very promising birds.

Migration of an Old-time Fancier.

Fanciers of the older school, writes friend W. A. Lott, who is himself "one of the old brigade," will be interested to hear of the migration of the veteran fancier, Sam Cook. He would have migrated to the trenches but for the age limit, and would doubtless have given a good account of himself, for even at his great age he is hale and hearty. His journey is a shorter one, namely, to the little town of Sudbury, where his life long friend, the late Joe Hills, spent most of his life. Sam had been for 44 years at one London address, amid the day and night noises of our great city, and one can guess his feelings while strolling in his hundred feet garden at his new abode. His weekly calls on me, continues Mr. Lott, will be sadly missed, and their opportunities for many a "crack" on old times and old fanciers, and with him has gone my opportunity of occasional inspection of his collection of rare and beautiful stuffed specimens, including the Tree-Creeper which was the first of its species ever to be seen on the show bench. Friend Sam is still proud of having been the first to exhibit a Tree-Creeper. May he find prolonged life and happiness in his village home.

Mr. Sandiford, of North Road, Preston, the noted importer of colour food, informs us that he has just received his second consignment of "Royal Red Feed," his renowned tasteless pepper. This, he states, comprises six tons of fresh-ground pure pimento, even better than anything he has ever offered in the past. Judging from the samples before us Sandiford's "Royal Red Feed" should maintain its high reputation; fanciers should secure a sample and see it for themselves. Mr. Sandiford also offers another very useful speciality, "Honey-made Egg Crumbs," excellent for mixing with colour-food and for rearing and feeding Canaries, etc.

HOW I KEEP MY SOFTBILLS.

By J. W. SAYWELL (Nottingham).

IN endeavouring to give the readers of Cage Birds an idea of how I keep my Softbills, I hope my article will be of interest as well as a little helpful. I have had to learn so much by experience that I think it a pity that others should tread the beaten track instead of profiting by the mistakes of those who have gone before them. This is by way of an apology for expressing my views at all in print. Do not think I have not gained a considerable amount of knowledge and help from more experienced fanciers than myself; also I have gleaned much knowledge from our paper Cage Birds.

I cannot understand why this section of our hobby is not taken up more generally than it is at present, as I consider Softbill keeping one of the most delightful and interesting sections of our hobby. It is to the novice generally that I pen these few lines, I do not wish to go into the subject to any great length; on the contrary, I wish to deal with the subject as briefly as possible.

It is the best plan to catch your own birds, if you can do so without infringing the bird laws, for then you have the first pick. I go out into the fields and ascertain the place where they appear to be settling, it being a peculiar trait with Softbills that you can always find them in one particular spot. I take about half a dozen traps with me and set them about twenty feet apart near a brook with a stout hedge running alongside of it.

A Match-stick Alarum.

I bait the traps with mealworms, fastening them on with a small bit of bird-lime near to the head, thus leaving the tail free. I fasten on to the traps a long piece of black cotton to reach where I am in hiding, and to the end of this I tie a match stick, as when you get a long way off you cannot hear or see your traps go off. Of course, when your trap goes off your match stick gives a jump.

When you get your bird or birds, get them home as quickly as possible, as they won't live long without food or water, and place them in a cage that has been darkened three parts of the way down, so that it leaves just enough light to see the food. Place a few mealworms and gentles in a tin inside the cage, also sprinkle a few ants' eggs on the top of the water, so that when the birds move about the draught from their wings moves the ants' eggs on the water; this has a tendency to make them eat.

Then leave them alone for a couple of hours or so to see how they take to cage life. If they have eaten any food, half your battle is over, but if no food has been eaten, and they are continually trying to get through the wires, then the best thing to do is to open the door and let them out.

If your bird has partaken of any food, the next day get your stock mixture, and to this chop about twenty mealworms and well mix together, so that when they get a monthful of mealworm they get a bit of food as well; by so doing you gradually get them on to solid food. It is rather troublesome while it lasts, and generally takes between a week and ten days to get them well on to insectile food.

When you have accomplished this, gradually raise your screen, letting a little more light into the cage. Raise it, say, one inch week by week until you can dispense with it altogether. If you adopt this method your birds do not knock about, and they gradually get used to you. As soon as your screen is level with the perches, offer the birds a mealworm from your fingers; you will not have to offer them many times before they will take one. What you want to do is to gain the confidence of your birds.

The Cages Described.

All my cages are two feet long and one foot high, as these small birds require plenty of exercise. I find the best plan is to give the room in the length of cage, as they soon acquire the habit of clinging to the wires if given too great a depth of cage room. To obviate this I always have also a piece of glass fixed on the inside of the wire from the top of cage down to the centre punch bar, which quickly breaks them of this habit.

The perches I prefer to be screwed into the back of the cage and reaching to within about half an inch of the front; this aids to the spring in the perches, and at the same time they are perfectly safe from dropping, which might startle the bird and cause it to damage its plumage. Fix your perches as far apart as possible, allowing the bird sufficient room to miss catching its tail on the ends of the cage. I also pad the perches with green baize, which has two distinct benefits: The birds' feet are kept quite clean, and it helps to keep the feet in good condition; all Softbills have tender feet, and the precaution is a necessary one.

Food tins are let in at each end of cage. In one I place soft food, and in the other grit and live food (maggots, mealworms, etc.). The advantage of keeping the foods separate is that the bird will throw out all the soft food in search of the insects if they are mixed. Water-glasses should be fixed on the outside, and kept scrupulously clean. For the cage bottom I use sawdust, as I find this keeps them in much cleaner condition than if sand is used.

The insides of all my stock cages are painted holly-green, and they can easily be washed out any time. I have two doors, one in the front which I use to give them the bath, hanging this on to the wires, and one at the end, through which I can run the bird out into the show cage easily, and I make it a practice to do this when cleaning out, so the bird is always in training, and there is no danger of frightening it.

"Drowned" Flies which Walked.

Feeding is a most important item, and I wish to go into detail. My stock mixture consists of the following: 2 parts ants' eggs, 2 parts dried flies, 1 part meat meal, 1 part carrot meal, 1 part silkworm pupæ, ½-part maw seed. To this mixture I add 1 part in 4 of egg cake, made as follows: 14 ozs. flour, 7 ozs. castor sugar, 2 ozs. lard, 4 eggs, half a teaspoonful of baking powder, and a pinch of salt. This should be cooked in a good hot oven and thoroughly baked. Put through a mill and reduce to coarse powder and thoroughly mix together. For live food, I give a few mealworms and maggots daily, also some live ants' eggs occasionally.

I was reading some advice by Mr. Houlton in which he said he fed his birds on flies drowned in beer. I have had some of these "drowned" flies from a beer shop, and on placing them on a paper in front of the fire with the idea of drying them, I was surprised to see about half of them shake themselves and start to walk away. My practice is to use a wire gauze fly-catcher, and when it is full place it in a hot oven; after that they won't trouble to get up and walk, but will keep for future use.

I WAS invited to go and see the stock during the next breeding season, and from the first nests the four hens had a total of fourteen Mules, only two of which were dark. Four were very lightly marked, the others were more or less variegated. This case, to my mind, proved the value of a well-bred cock Canary for establishing a strain.

A good many years ago I decided to go in for light Mule breeding, and, knowing a fancier who had occasionally bred light Mules, I bought from him a hen Canary which had bred a variegated Mule. I could not get a related cock, but seeing a well-known breeder of light Mules advertising sib-bred cock Canaries in Cage Birds, I bought one. I paid about five times its face value, but being assured that its breeding was all right, I was satisfied with my bargain.

Light Mules by the Dozen.

I reared five young from that pair, and the following season bred several light Mules from the young hens. The following season again I bred a good number of light ones, including a clear Linnet Mule, the next season a clear Goldfinch Mule. Since that time I have added other six clear Mules to the list, two of which were bred in 1914. A total of eight clear Mules from five different hens is a record of which I think I am justly entitled to feel proud. Of course, besides the clears, I have bred dozens of lightly marked Mules.

I have never bought another cock Canary to cross into my own strain, but I have on two occasions bought a hen, but they were hens I knew had bred light Mules, and although they were not from a light Muling strain they had more size than my own, which was my reason for using them. I may say that when I am breeding Canaries from my birds I don't much consider their relationship to each other, and I breed Canaries only from those that breed the best Mules. At the present time I have a number of fine sturdy young birds, bred from brother and sister. Of course I don't often pair them so nearly related, and when I do so it is for some special purpose. I think that is about all I need say, and if there is any point upon which I have not been sufficiently clear I shall be pleased to explain it to the best of my ability.

The Chairman, Mr. R. Tindale, invited discussion on any of the points mentioned by Mr. Maddison, and many questions were asked and answered. Amongst them were:—

Does Mr. Maddison give all the credit to the hen Canary for breeding light Mules, or does he select some particular sort of Finch? Ans., I rely entirely upon the Canary. I know that many good light Mules have been bred from hen Canaries which had not been sib-bred, and I think it is such cases that have caused some fanciers to conclude that it is the Finch that really causes the Mules to be light. I quite admit that if the Canary is in extra vigorous condition and the Finch in flat condition it might influence the young to take more to the Canary.

Hen Finches Uncertain Breeders.

Seeing that Mr. Maddison has so much faith in the cock Canary, can he say if hen Finches are much used for Mule breeding? Ans.: I think the principal reason why hen Finches are so seldom used is because they are as a rule very uncertain breeders.

But in the case of the Bullfinch, where the hen is always used, is it not rather strange that so few light Mules have been bred from this cross when dark Canary-Bullfinches are fairly plentiful? Ans.: I think the scarcity of light Bullfinch Mules can be accounted for by the fact that cock Canaries from light Muling strains are seldom, if ever, used for pairing with hen Bullfinches.

Does Mr. Maddison always pair his Muling Canaries yellow and buff? Ans.: Not always; my aim has been to breed Mules clear, or as near clear as possible, and with that object in view I have sometimes paired them double yellow and sometimes double buff.

Do you always take a nest of Canaries from the hens before pairing them with the Finch? Ans.: All hens which have previously bred light Mules I take a nest of Canaries from, but young hens are paired to Finches first, and any that breed light Mules are afterwards paired to Canaries if necessary.

Do you find the Finches of much assistance in feeding the young Mules? Ans.: Mine never have the opportunity; I remove the Finch when the hen lays her third egg, and keep him out till she is again ready to nest.

Does Mr. Maddison always use house-moulted Finches if so, is it because they breed lighter Mules than field-moulted birds? Ans.: I use house-moulted birds for preference, not because I think they are sure to breed lighter Mules, but I somehow feel more confidence in them for being breeders, although I have many times had field-moulted birds which were very free breeders.

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Maddison for his interesting paper, and answers to the various questions.

Is the Norwich Plainhead Progressing?

A paper read by Mr. T. Johnson (Southpor) before the members of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S.

WHEN I received the intimation from your secretary that I had been proposed to read a paper, I realised you had done me a very great honour, but I also realised that I should have a difficult bill to fill. Lecturing is a new experience to me, and to start by lecturing before the members of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. is on a par with a lay preacher discoursing in a cathedral, so I hope you will make allowance for my diffidence.

To talk about the Norwich Plainhead to a company of Manchester enthusiasts is like a Lilliputian telling Colossus how to grow big, for if any section of the Fancy in the British Isles knows how to produce the Norwich, it is you people in the environs of Manchester and East Lancashire.

However, I have so worded the heading to this paper that no one may accuse me of trying to teach you how to produce the Norwich. I am after that information myself. It has always seemed a curious thing to me that those people who do know how to produce them are, either from sheer cussedness or from rank modesty, as close as an oyster.

Just a Few Impressions.

Anyhow, as I was saying, this is not a paper on breeding. I will leave that to a more successful breeder, and for such you need not go out of your own society. I would like to mention that I do not wish to appear dogmatic. I mean that anything I may say must not be taken as a manifestation that because I say it is so, it must be. In short, I don't wish to pose as Sir Oracle, I am here just to give you a few impressions of the Norwich Canary that I have gathered during the 12 to 15 years I have been interested in it.

That doubtless is not long for some of you older fanciers, but I hope to show you that it is a sufficiently long time for the Norwich to have had a few vicissitudes, and that during that time the Norwich has improved as a variety. I would like to mention though, in passing, that the Norwich is not yet up to the standard adopted by the clubs; few, in my opinion, come within measurable distance of it. But we are on the way, and, again in my opinion, the youngsters are an improvement every year.

Well, to begin, I must mention that the birds to which I am referring in this paper were the best, or were considered by many to be the best, in their day in this district, and so far as the Norwich Canary is concerned, this district has not been behind in their production, either then or now.

The Birds of Long Ago.

The first bird I shall draw your attention to for comparative purposes is the old "King"—Sandiford's old King. That is as far back as my memory serves. I think you will agree with me that this was perhaps the best buff Norwich cock being exhibited at that time—1905, I think. He was a good bird without doubt; and I want you to throw your minds back a few years, and compare him with the best buff cocks of to-day. I think I may venture to say that in a class of present champions he would be unnoticed, or, at least, low down in the cards.

Some of you may not agree with me, but that is perhaps my misfortune. Have you ever wondered what a funny world this would be when everybody agreed with everybody else? Anyway, my perceptive faculties tell me that if the old King were alive to-day he would be short of substance and the valuable head points which are essential for present competition.

Another bird that had a glorious career was the "Little King," shown by Mr. Tom Seed, and I hope to convince you further to my argument by taking this bird, because he lived over so many seasons. When first I knew him he invariably stood first, and I used to admire him for his silkiness of feather. Later, when his show career was getting ended, it was easy to find four or five birds to stand before him in a class, not because he had deteriorated as a bird, but because we were breeding them better. When he did happen to tumble in first, it was because the judge was perhaps a bit sentimental and did not like to see an old champion beaten.

Would be Outclassed To-day.

Now, I want you to compare him with, say, the buff cock so successfully shown by Mr. Davies. The old champion would be swamped in every point, and I venture to add that there are so many birds better to-day that he would be unnoticed. Yet the critics say that our Norwich are deteriorating!

Two other birds which were doing a great amount of winning about that time were the "Sign of the Cross" and the old ticked yellow. Both of these were about unbeatable at that time, and looking back I consider that they were the precursors of the improved Norwich of to-day, because they stood out so much from their fellows of that time. They were triumphs of the scientific breeder's art.

Another bird which was being exhibited then was a variegated buff cock shown at Manchester by Mr. Andrew Watson, of Scotland, and afterwards claimed by Mr. Sandiford. This bird was to me a revelation, and was probably the most noted and most noticed Norwich of that year, 1909, and the reason why he was the most noticed was because he was such an improvement, such an advance on the older birds—at least, that is how he appeared to me.

He was bigger, with a more massive head, and had a beautiful rise from the beak—a point which requires watching at the present time. Withal, he was of beautiful type, and had the lovely silky feather that the present-day winners have. If anything, he was a little narrow at entrance, but he widened out towards the neck, and on the whole I think he would compare favourably with present-day winners, except he might lose a little in neck.

Wagtails in Ireland.

Sir,—Yellow Wagtails have not been very rare in Ireland these last seven or eight years, and about the glens of Antrim the Grey Wagtail is very plentiful in river districts. As I am a keen angler and British bird fancier, I come across many strange birds during my fishing. I can hear the Blackcap Warbler at his best in two minutes' walk from my house in Belfast, which is rare, I believe, in Ireland.

To Exterminate Lice in Canaries

Sir,—Would some of your numerous readers be good enough to let me know how to exterminate lice? In one nest of young birds I find they have made their appearance in some unaccountable way. I have always been most careful to keep all cages and utensils thoroughly clean, and am quite at a loss to discover how they have been introduced. These remarks apply only to this one nest; all other birds are perfectly free, and I wish to exterminate them immediately for fear others may become affected. I have asked some of the best-known breeders how to deal with them, and only a few days ago one of our best fanciers, and a leading judge frankly admitted that he did not know how to get rid of them entirely, once they make their appearance.

As this question must be one a number of your readers have had to solve, and is a vital one in a bird-room, I think if you would invite correspondence on this subject it would be conferring a great benefit upon your readers, for I am loath to believe that it is impossible to exterminate them. Washing, particularly with young birds, would be useless unless frequently carried out, and to encourage replies I enclose 2s. 6d., which you may forward to the reply which, in your opinion, is likely to prove the most successful.

Intelligence in Birds.

Sir,—I have been glad to see some interesting notes on this subject in the correspondence columns and, with the view of keeping the matter before your readers, I may perhaps be permitted to mention two recent incidents in my aviary. Some time since a pair of White-winged Whydahs built a domed nest on the top of a dense clump of marsh-grass in a division of the aviary which opens into the flight. A pair of Sikkim Siskins had previously nested in a Pinus maritima in the same division. At the time when the Whydahs commenced operations the Siskins had two young on the wing, and one which was not quite so forward. Whydahs are dangerous birds when actually nesting, so, when the Giant Whydah bred here a few years since, in this same division, I shut the hen in and let her rear the young single-handed. But this time I was very anxious to ascertain whether the males of those species of Whydah which are alleged to be polygamous do or do not normally assist in feeding the young, so I left the division open, with the result that there have been some losses and much interference with nesting in this aviary. But there are always compensations; for instance, the above question has been settled. Now the Siskins knew that it would mean death to enter the Whydah's division, but (despite the remarks of one correspondent who commented on the desertion by birds of their young), they had not the least intention of abandoning their third and backward youngster, who was not yet strong enough to leave the friendly shelter of the Pinus. This was how they got round the difficulty. There was one long bough of the tree which just touched with its extreme tip the wire-netting between this division and the next. Entering the next division they called the youngster and induced him to make his way along the bough until he reached the netting; then they fed him through the netting from the opposite side. This they continued to do until he was strong enough to fly well.

The Whydahs also had a little difficulty to surmount; the entrance opening in the wall of their nest was so placed that anyone entering the aviary could look into the latter. This was how they got over the difficulty; the hen went off on a foraging expedition and returned with some flowering heads of grass on stems which she had cut to a length of about six inches. She inserted the stems in the base of the nest in such a way that the heads formed a screen, covering and concealing the entrance. I watched her begin and complete the work through powerful binoculars.

The correspondence on this subject promised well, but unfortunately it did not soar above the commonplace. One correspondent referred to birds deserting their young, but this, I think, is a rare event in a state of Nature, and when it occurs there is always some good reason for it, though we may not always detect the reason. For instance, a few years since a brood of Spotted Flycatchers in my garden was deserted, but a close examination discovered the male drowned in a small fish-pond in which he had tried to bathe. It seemed cruel of the hen to desert her five young, but she knew that it was absolutely impossible for her to rear them single-handed and was wise enough not to attempt the impossible.

Another correspondent (or was it the same?) mentioned the case of a Rook which killed another Rook with a broken wing. But this seems to me to prove the reasoning power of birds. The Rook knew that a bird with a broken wing must die, and mercifully put it out of its misery. Compare this with the narrative of the Raven in Bishop Stanley's History of Birds, who fed a dog with a broken leg until it recovered. The Raven evidently knew that a dog with a broken leg would recover. Perhaps your sceptical correspondent will write again and say that he does not believe the story. Now, would a Bishop tell a fib? Also, what about Elijah?

P.S.—It may be of interest to fanciers of foreign birds to mention that the Whydahs reared two young.

Birds in the Firing Line.

The Vibration Theory Disproved.

Sir,—The following is part of a letter I have received from a chum, who has been at the front since the outbreak of the war, and I am sending it to you, thinking it may be of interest.

"Bowler."

I have two splendid young Blackbirds which I took out of a nest that I found here. It was very strange how they ever came out of the eggs. I could scarcely believe it. The big guns have been roaring every day within about twenty yards from the nest, and their discharge shakes the earth we are standing on. However, they manage to hatch out I do not know, but they will be picking for themselves by the time this letter reaches you, and if I can manage to bring one home, I will do so, just to prove it to you I hope you are having good luck with all your birds. When this lot is over they will be giving us five days' leave. We draw for our turns, and if I am lucky you might see me some day when not expected.

Your old chum,

C. Tormay.

The House Martin and the Soldiers.

Sir,—As a reader of your journal in peace time, and thinking of the numerous stories of wild birds which I have read in Cage Birds, I am writing to acquaint you of birds as I have seen them almost every day in the part of France where I am at present.

I have been in the trenches many a time during a dreary night in cold and rain, with German snipers and the guns going at it until daybreak. Then in the lull of the firing the Skylark has soared above and poured out his beautiful song; you forget sometimes that the war is on. At one place I was in a Wren built its nest just above a pump where the soldiers had their morning toilet. Having been brought up in a town like Manchester, and not seeing any such sights there, it is marvellous to me to find that under the circumstances out here such things can occur. I am not far from the firing-line at present, and the house in which I am billeted with several others is practically ruined by shell. Yet a House Martin has built a nest on the wall, and is bringing up her young. She keeps flying all day long in and out of the window and feeding her little youngsters. We have put a notice under the nest that no one must interfere with it or with the young birds, but I do not think we shall be here long enough to see the young birds leave the nest. It is a most interesting sight to see the mother feed the young. We sing and make all sorts of noises, but the bird takes no notice of us. The big guns are making their clatter all day, and amid all the havoc these birds go about as if they had got accustomed to the state of affairs.

The Ups and Downs of Hybrid Breeding.

Sir,—The following is a record of my birds up to date, and may be of interest to readers of Cage Birds, especially Hybrid breeders, as it shows the trials and disappointments that one sometimes has to put up with: No. 1 pair, Goldfinch and Greenfinch, 1st nest, 4 eggs, 2 fertile, 2 hatched June 10th, young mysteriously disappeared June 13th; 2nd nest, 2 eggs, 2 fertile, due to hatch July 3. No. 2 pair, Greenfinch and Bullfinch. 1st nest, 1 egg, unfertile, May 11; 2nd nest, 3 eggs, unfertile, June 13; 3rd nest, 2 eggs, eaten by rats, June 24. No. 3 pair, Goldfinch and Bullfinch, 1st nest, 1 egg, unfertile, May 13; 2nd nest, 4 eggs, 2 fertile, 2 hatched, June 7, 1 mysteriously disappeared June 10th, 1 died at 8 days' old, starved by foster parents; 3rd nest, 2 eggs, 1 fertile, 1 hatched, June 19, killed to-day by cat, June 28 (sudden death of the cat); 4th nest, 1 egg, 1 fertile, due to hatch July 1st. No. 4 pair, Linnet and Bullfinch, 1st nest, 5 eggs, 2 fertile, 1 hatched, June 20, in the same nest as the 3rd nest from No. 3 pair, and killed by same cat. No. 5 pair, Hawfinch and Greenfinch, 1st nest, 4 eggs, due to hatch July 9th. No. 6 pair, Goldfinch and Linnet, 1st nest, 2 eggs, 1 fertile, did not hatch, June 20; 2nd nest, 1st egg laid this morning, June 28. No. 7 pair, Twite-Greenfinch Hybrid cock and buff hen Canary, 1st nest, 4 eggs, 3 fertile, 2 hatched, May 28th, died on June 1st; 2nd nest, 2 eggs, hen only sat 4 days, June 17; 3rd nest, 3 eggs, hen again only sat a few days, June 25.

From the above it may be seen that one must be prepared for anything that turns up. One's hopes are raised very high, only to be dashed down again. But it is without doubt the most interesting of all the branches of bird breeding, and when one does succeed in rearing a youngster one has something to be proud of. In conclusion I may say all my eggs except those from No. 7 pair are tested out of doors in the nests of Linnets, Greenfinches, and such like, as in my opinion the youngsters grow bigger, and are more likely to be reared, that is, if one can keep vermin, cats, and boys away from them, but of course it is taking big risks. I trust others may have better luck than I have had so far this season, but I may yet breed one or two, and my hopes have not yet quite vanished. I have had some eggs this season which after being sat on for 24 to 48 hours have turned very light in weight, and on being broken look as if they have been hard boiled.

Messrs. Gough and Loach's Buff Norwich Hen.

A Present for the Kaiser.

Sir,—I wish to thank most heartily Cage Birds for depicting one of my favourite birds on the front page of last week's issue, also to extend my thanks to the artist. Perhaps an epitome of the bird's career may be interesting. She was a late-hatched one, July 1915, and was shown for the first time at the Crystal Palace, January 1914, and at six shows during 1914 and 1915. From these shows she never returned without a card; her wins are: 1st Watford, 3rd Coventry, 4th Crystal Palace, vhc Northampton, West Bromwich, and Birmingham, hc Wolverhampton.

This bird did not do any good as a breeder last season, for not a single bird did we get from her, and all brought about by catching cold returning from a show. This year she is doing well, and has reared a nest of four, and now has three young four days old. Last week, at our club nest feather show, two of her offspring out of the nest of four were shown (six weeks old), and took 1st each in the clear and unevenly marked classes, and special for best bird in show. These young birds look like putting their mother's record in the shade.

Our breeding season has been a very good one so far, exceeding last year's record both in quantity and quality. We have 11 pairs up, against 15 last year, and have 24 birds on the sticks and 14 in the nests, all doing well, and 45 per cent. appear to be yellows. I usually get a good percentage of yellows, and claim that this is due to breeding with yellow hens bred from a yellow male parent. I find that I am not the only pebble on the beach, so far as a successful season is concerned, for a few of my brother fanciers in and around Wolverhampton whom I have visited appear to be well satisfied with their breeding season. We only hope this applies to many other clubs.

My partner "Gough" says that if the war should be over by the time the birds are through their moult, and result in the capture of the Kaiser, he would gladly prepare for him a brace of our best birds, saturated with arsenic, packed and fully addressed, to be delivered personally with the following note: "With best wishes from the Bulldog breed for a speedy voyage to the place you well deserve." Dose: To be taken in one gulp. These are, I believe, the sentiments of the Fancy generally, and especially so with those who had to give up their favourite birds, to go out to fight. However, I hope the majority will soon return to take up once more this fascinating hobby and so swell the pages of that interesting and indispensable paper Cage Birds.

My Birdroom Month by Month.

By a Midland Birdlover.

The previous instalment, published in our issue of February 27, gave short details of bird-room management from January to June, and the following will complete the round of the year.

THE treatment of my birds during July is practically the same as in the preceding month. Every care is taken to see that everything is scrupulously clean, and that an abundant supply of fresh air is allowed to circulate freely through the birdroom. I never relax my vigilance against the red mite, and I take the greatest care to see that all soft food is sweet. The bath is given freely, and the supply of green food for the old birds is continued. Most of my breeding pairs are broken up by the end of the month.

The diet for August is plain Canary seed as a staple, and a pinch of rape seed twice a week. Towards the end of the month I begin to give a little colour food, and I supply my birds with the wild seeds that are obtainable during this month. A sharp look-out is still kept for red mites; in fact a fancier must always be on the alert for signs of these pests.

September: During this month the moulting period will be passed through. I mix my colour food with Spratts' Cod Liver Oil Food, which I find very satisfactory. Once a week I give a small piece of sulphate of iron in the drinking water. When the birds are well on in the moult I add a small quantity of linseed to the staple diet of canary. Chickweed and plantain stalks I give for green food through the moult.

October: Moulting continues in most cases through part of this month, and as the nights are rather chilly, care should be taken that the birds do not catch a chill. As the birds finish off the moult I gradually begin to cut down the supply of colour food. I allow my birds plenty of exercise, also fresh air; care, however, is wanted to see that the birds are not in a draught. I still continue the baths, and as soon as the first new feathers are seen the window of the bird-room is covered with a light blind to tone down the light. The closing week of this month should see the completion of the moult.

As my birds are in a cold room I give a pinch of a mixture of hemp and rape once a week during November. Great care is required in the matter of bathing during this month; when cold, I withhold same altogether, and at other times use water with the chill taken off. Should I have any birds who have not finished their moult I take special care to see that these are protected from draughts and placed in the warmest part of the room. A piece of boiled carrot, ripe apple or banana may be given in place of the green food.

I give a pinch of hemp, inga and rape once or twice weekly during December. I still give the bath, but with caution, and with due regard to the climatic conditions, and condition of the birds. I withhold green food altogether during this month, apples and boiled carrots taking its place. When all birds have completely finished the moult I go over my stock, separating those birds I wish to keep from those for sale. These latter I dispose of as soon as possible, more room being then available for the birds left.

Having now given my method of rearing and feeding Canaries for the whole year, I need only remind all beginners that though there is no royal road to success in bird-breeding (if there were its fascination would disappear) there is plenty of pleasure and profit to be obtained from this hobby if the fancier will have patience and perseverance. Remember the old saying, if you don't at first succeed try, try again.

MISS PRATT & E.V.—Replied to by post.

FOR THE YOUNG (F. H. P.).—(1) Two each are as many birds as the cages will safely accommodate. With strict attention to cleanliness you might at pinch, fo a short time, keep three in each, but two should be considered the full capacity. (2) Continue giving a little egg or soft food daily until the birds are two months old—only a small quantity, say, a large tea-spoonful to every four birds, need be given. After this age give a small teaspoonful to each bird twice a week. If colour feeding, you may, of course, have to start giving soft food daily for the colour food by the time the birds are two months old, in which case you would have to rather increase the quantity given daily instead of giving it only casually. Then you would have to wait till the end of the moult before reducing the frequency.

NO USE IN LEGS (Frank).—I should suspect that the toes are deformed, but this is the merest guess at hazard, as you give absolutely no clue to found an opinion upon. You had better write again and give as many particulars as you can about the bird's condition, and the appearance of the feet and toes. Meantime, if the hind toes are turned forward underneath the centre of the feet, you should see that it has good-sized perches, of a flattened oval shape on top, and that they are securely fixed, and put on small rubber rings, until you get a further reply. You can make the rings by cutting rather less than an eighth of an inch off the end of the tubing used on babies' feeding bottles. To put them on, catch the bird and hold the three front toes all together, put the ring over them, and pass it on up the leg, holding the hind toe back against the leg, until nearly as far as the end of the hind toe. Leave it there, and let the bird wear it for a week or two, or until you get a more definite reply.

YOUNG DYING (P.W.).—I am inclined to think that the losses are due to dietetic troubles, though if they do not quickly disappear after adopting the following treatment I should advise you to send a body to our Mr. Yates for post-mortem in order to ascertain whether there is any bacillary disease. See rules under heading "Post-Mortems." Try the following treatment, and report result in a month or so. First of all see that all your foods and seeds, particularly hemp, are quite sound and sweet. Hemp is most to be suspected. Crush a little of this, and reject it if it has not a sweet, milky-white kernel. When the young are removed from their parents, give an unlimited supply of plain canary seed in the seed box, and place on top of it each morning a teaspoonful of dry summer rape for each brood of four birds. In addition give a heaped teaspoonful of egg-food, mixed rather on the dry side, for each three birds each morning, and sprinkle this with maw seed. In the afternoon throw out any soft food that is left, wash out the vessels, and give the same quantity as in the morning of a mixture of equal parts cracked hemp and broken groats. After the first week the quantity of soft food may be gradually diminished, and add equal proportions of white millet, niger, and teazle to the afternoon supply of seeds. The seed mixture in the afternoon may also be substituted occasionally by way of making variety, with a similar quantity of boiled rape, and the soft food in the morning with a similar quantity of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar. After the first few days give a few seed heads of shepherd's purse, mouse-ear, or half ripe plantain stalks every day or two, and keep the cages strewn well with clean gritty sand. A piece of cuttlefish in the wires for birds to peck at any time is also useful in keeping birds in good condition. Keep a regular supply of pure, plain water in the cages, and offer the bath two or three times a week. Should the birds begin to go soft under this treatment, at once give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the water for two or three consecutive days, and after this give six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of gentian for a few days.

CANNOT STAND (Miss E. P. H.).—Sorry, but I'm afraid you can do nothing further for the bird. The cause of its trouble is evidently a deep-seated one, possibly paralysis of a nerve centre. You may try the following treatment for three or four weeks and note result, but, honestly, I am not very sanguine as to the results. Give it rather thick perches with a flattened oval shape on top, so that it can stand on them with the minimum of effort, and see that they are securely fixed. Give a fair amount of green food, or half-ripened seed heads, in variety, daily, and if it is not in an overfat condition, give a morsel of bread and milk on which you have dropped two drops of lacto-phosphate of lime and iron and sprinkled with maw seed every second day. Also get a chemist to mix you one ounce dilute sulphuric acid, half-ounce tincture of gentian, and one drachm of tincture of nux vomica, and add 20 drops of this to the drinking water every second day, alternating it with the bread and milk, if that is given. You may try bathing the feet in a cold solution of witch hazel—a teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of cold water—for a few minutes every third day, then dry, and gently rub on a drop of some stimulating lotion liniment, such as Elliman's.

TOO ATTENTIVE (A. J., Cricklewood).—(1) I think, perhaps, you may be devoting a little too much attention to your birds, which is, at least, partly the cause of your trouble. Unless you were actually rearing young birds by hand without any assistance at all from the parents, there is no necessity at all for feeding them every hour. Such frequent attention is apt to defeat its own object by making the hens nervous and restless; fresh food three or four times a day is ample. When the next broods hatch, leave in the cage an unlimited supply of canary seed. Commence giving a little crisp young green food on the fourth day, and from that time give a small quantity freshly gathered each morning and afternoon. When the young are about a week or ten days old you may add a little soaked rape or a small quantity of cracked hemp each day if the hen seems to slack in feeding, and also offer a bath in which you have dissolved a little common salt at any time that she seems to fag in her duties. Do not interfere with her more than is absolutely necessary, and with these few hints I think you will find things go more smoothly next time. (2) It is certainly not wise to breed with the wheezy bird. It is only building up trouble for yourself in the future. Cage him alone as soon as you can spare him from the hen. In the water every second day for a week give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and after that treat the same as advised to "L.G.," issue of June 26, but omit the bread and milk. (3) Chew a pinch of the canary seed to see if it is musty, and if so, change it for a better sample. If seed is sound and sweet give the bird first the aperient mixture advised for No. 2 for a week; add a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar to its diet every second day for a fortnight, and follow up the aperient with four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight.

A YOUNG GLUTTON (Bluebird Coop).—The bird is suffering from digestive derangements, most likely from being put on a diet solely of dry seeds too early. Treat as follows, and if not too far gone it should soon be all right again. Keep a regular supply of plain canary seed in the cage and place on top of it a pinch of summer rape each morning. Each morning for the next fortnight give half a teaspoonful of egg food, or an equivalent quantity of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar. In the afternoon throw out any soft food that may be left and give in its place half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and broken groats. Give a spray of seedy chickweed, or a few seed heads of shepherd's purse or plantain. In each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water add ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for three consecutive days, and afterwards give instead six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of gentian every second day for a week.

STOPPED SINGING (R. R.).—There can be no doubt that the bird's condition is chiefly due to the violent fluctuations of temperature to which it would be exposed whilst hanging in the window. It is now moulting, and will probably complete its full moult before it resumes singing. Meantime, keep it well away from the window, in a bright, healthy position, where it will not be exposed to direct draughts, rapid extremes of temperature, or fumes of burning lights. In addition to the staple of plain canary, give half a teaspoonful of egg food, or the equivalent in bread and milk, and in either case drop on it two drops of cod liver oil emulsion. Give this every second day for a fortnight, and after that twice a week without the oil for the rest of the moulting period. Give also every third day half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats, and give a morsel of green food, or some half-ripened seed heads daily. In the drinking water add ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for three days, and after this five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a fortnight.

ROLLER AND YORKSHIRE (Roller).—(1) You can only improve a little upon the treatment you have commenced by adding to the dietary a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and broken groats twice a week, and give a little green food of half-ripened seed heads in variety daily. Continue giving the sulphur and potash on alternate days for three or four weeks, and then miss each alternate week until the moult is nearly over, when you may drop it altogether. Towards the end of the moult, during the weeks you omit the sulphur, etc., add 20 drops of chemical food to the water every second day. Keep the bird in a bright and healthy place, free from direct draughts or rapid extremes of temperature, and allow it to bathe freely as long as the weather remains warm. It is not at all likely to sing until the moult is quite finished, and it is worse than useless to attempt to go on breeding with it any more this season. (2) I am afraid the Yorkshire cock will be no use for immediate breeding, and I very much doubt the wisdom of attempting to use him for breeding until the squeakiness has quite disappeared. You should treat him the same as advised to "R.R." in this issue for a fortnight, or longer if necessary.

A THIRSTY SUBJECT (N. B.).—Certainly it is not necessary to destroy the bird. The following treatment should soon set matters right. Offer a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition to this, give separately half a teaspoonful of scalded rape and a morsel of banana every second day, and on the alternate days give a piece of bread the size of a large hazel nut soaked in cold milk, drained, then dusted with carbonate of bismuth and finally sprinkled with raw seed. On these days also give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, and broken groats. See that the hemp is quite sound in the kernel. In the drinking water add six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of opium daily until the droppings assume a normal consistency. Then give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tinct. of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week. Withhold all green food until the bird returns to a normal condition.

SITS HUDDLED UP (W. D. F.).—The staple diet you are giving with linseed is not a suitable one for regular use. You should also make yourself quite sure that the situation between the window and fireplace is not in the way of direct draughts. Cage this bird alone for a week or two. Keep it in a comfortable place, but not overheated. Give a staple of plain canary only, and in addition give separately ever second day half a teaspoonful of summer rape and a morsel of banana, and on the alternate days a morsel of bread and milk, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with soft sugar. On these days also give a spray of watercress. Twice a week give a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, millet and broken groats. In the drinking water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and afterwards give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight.

A TRIO (C. Hutchings).—(1) Coarse scales on the legs and feet are the natural consequences of age, and I suspect this is all that is wrong with your bird, and is also the explanation of its prolonged silence. Many old birds in the best of health do not resume singing until the opening of a new year, or even the approach of spring. You may give it half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed every third day for a fortnight, and add to the drinking water ten drops of glycerine and ten of lemon juice about as often for the same length of time. This will help to bring out its song. (2) The best average size of perch is just such a thickness that the bird's claws, when the bird is standing on it, do not quite completely encircle it, the tips of the middle front claw and the hind claw being separated by, say, an eighth to a quarter of an inch of space. This is best decided by observation, as the larger varieties of Canaries will require rather thicker perches than the smaller breeds. In aviaries and large cages having several perches, some should be made a little thinner and others a little thicker than this average. (3) A Sib. hen is one that is the product of in-breeding for several generations, that is, birds more or less closely related to each other are mated together year after year to produce Sib-bred birds. This is the usual way of producing a strain of light muling Canaries.

BULLFINCH-GREENFINCH HYBRIDS (Elgin).—You are quite right about the rarity of the cross. The cock Bullfinch is not considered to be a successful breeder while in captivity, but he is not absolutely hopeless. The great difficulty is in securing fertile eggs—not in getting him to mate. I am doubtful if the young will have any extra value on account of the way they are bred, although, as most breeders contend that the cock bird influences the colour of the young, it will be interesting to see if yours are superior in that respect to others bred in the usual manner, i.e., between the cock Greenfinch and hen Bullfinch. I hope you will successfully moult them and exhibit at the winter shows. The chief points in a good specimen are size, richness of colour, and generally bold appearance, with large full head and neck, good quality of feather, and high condition.

HYBRID BREEDING IN AN AVIARY (Novice).—You will not be able to do anything in the breeding way with your birds until next season, so your best plan will be to make your purchases in the autumn and keep them in cages until you are ready with your aviary. The month of October is frequently one of the best of the year, and should we be fortunate in the weather, it would not be too late to turn the birds in. The few weeks they would have in cages would be beneficial, for it would allow you time to get them a bit steady, and really wild birds in an aviary are quite as objectionable as they are in cages. You do not give me any dimensions, so I am unable to advise you as to the number of birds you could do with, but anyway, do not overcrowd. (2) The British bird and Canary crosses are the easiest to produce, but I gather from your letter that it is the British bird crosses you would like to try for. Of these you could possibly manage Linnet-Greenfinch, Goldfinch-Greenfinch, and Goldfinch-Bullfinch. The usual method is to put the eggs under reliable Canary hens to hatch and rear the young Hybrids, although occasionally the British bird hens will do this themselves. If you are interested and intend going in for Hybrid production, I would advise you to get one of our books on the subject; it would assist you immensely.

BREEDING GOLDFINCHES IN AVIARY (T. L. Hill).—Yes, there is a possibility of your young Finches being reared. I have bred them myself in an aviary with several pairs of Canaries in it. In addition to the food you are giving them now, add hard-boiled egg, mixed with stale sponge cake and powdered biscuit, or half its bulk of good insectile food, making it just slightly crumbly moist. You must be particularly liberal with wild food. Gather good big bunches of all kinds, including plenty of seeding grass, and fix these up for the old birds. Green fly should be freely given. These you will find on weeds growing along the hedgerows, or under trees; gather them carefully, and put in; the old birds will soon strip them, and they are splendid food for the babies. An occasional small pottul of soaked or germinated seeds will be much appreciated. (2) Why not add the Buntings to your collection? They are brightly coloured, and most interesting birds, and some of them are constant singers. You could obtain these later on and steady them down a bit before turning in with the other birds.

SNIPE AND LANDRAILS FOR AN AVIARY (R. Williams).—Snipe and Landrails would both be most difficult birds to obtain, and in the case of the Snipe I certainly think it would be necessary to handrear. Their method of feeding is totally different to other birds (excepting, perhaps, the Woodcock), and I do not think it would be possible to meet them off. It is a bird of the marshes, and feeds exclusively on worms, slugs, and insects, and in attempting to hand rear you would have to supply a good quantity of these. With Landrails, it is different; they are much more general in their feeding, and include seeds and vegetable matter with insects of all kinds. I do not anticipate you would have much difficulty in meating off young birds. For hand-rearing, hard-boiled egg, stale sponge cake, and insectile food make a good mixture. (2) I know where several of the Waders are kept together in an aviary, but the Landrail is rather pugnacious with its own kind, and I fear you would have trouble with it in a mixed collection.

BRITISH BIRDS' TROUBLES (F. W. Ware).—As you say, keeping British birds in health and condition in the city is not an easy accomplishment. One of the chief difficulties is no doubt the trouble to get suitable green food, and wild plants in season. The best way to get over this is to supply soaked seeds, and also some that have commenced to germinate. If you damp teazle and rape and keep in a warm place, the seed soon begins to sprout. Start a little two or three times a week, so as to keep up the supply. You will find this to be excellent food for them. If you suspect indigestion or bowel trouble, there is nothing to equal a dusting of bismuth on a cube of bread dipped in hot milk. I notice in mentioning your Finches in order, each is troubled with baldness, and this may arise from feeding troubles or insects. Before making any drastic alterations in your feeding, thoroughly examine the birds for these pests. Catch the sufferer and hold for a minute or so in the hand; turn the feathers up round the thighs and under the wings, and if insects are present you will probably see them running over the hand. If you have only two or three birds you will no doubt get rid of them by hand washing, repeating in about 3 days later, and putting the birds in thoroughly clean cages—cages that have been scrubbed and disinfected. While they are in these, treat the aviary in the same manner. Not a single insect must be left behind, or you will soon have the trouble over again. Feeding as you do, that is, mostly on a seed diet, I would advise you to occasionally give your birds an aperient of Epsom or Glauber Salts. Had you done this, it is probably you may have saved the Siskin and others. (2) As regards canary seed, I have used it liberally all my life for my birds, and have never traced any trouble to its use, excepting once or twice when it has been of inferior quality and badly stored. (3) You cannot do better than treat your Bramblefinch in practically the same manner as advised for your Chaffinch. (4) You should have no trouble in removing your birds from your present dwelling; the best way is to put them all in a couple of cages and take them with you.

BULLFINCH HEN NOT LAYING (W. G. Smithson).—It is rather unusual for a Bullfinch hen to refuse green food, but anyway, you should gather seeding wild food and give a fresh bundle daily; she is sure to peek it over. Take some of the unripe seeds and insects lurking among the spray, and these will assist, so also will a good spoonful of wild seed mixture. Many Bullfinch hens do not think of nesting until late in the season, and there is plenty of time yet, the only way is to keep her well supplied, on no account neglect her; she may commence any day now.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

SICK COCKATEEL, ETC. (F. J. H.).—You should give the Cockateel a little longer trial. If you can catch or have him caught without distressing him too much, give him daily a little cod liver oil, about six drops, from the end of a piece of wood, or by brushing the inside of his beak and tongue with a camel-hair brush that has been dipped in the oil. Also bathe the foot in hot water (as hot as you can comfortably bear your hand in), dry with a soft cloth and then paint with neat whiskey. Pleased to hear the Cardinal is improving; continue the treatment till it is fit again. The kindest, quickest and least painful manner to destroy a bird or birds is to put them in an air-tight box containing a chloroform pad, the quantity of the latter would depend on size of box, etc.; your chemist would tell you this if you supplied him with the particulars. But please do not destroy them if you have time to communicate with me. I will with pleasure arrange for their distribution to suitable houses by return of post, if what you fear should occur, which I certainly hope will not be the case.

A SHY TALKER (C. A. M.).—I have carefully noted all the points you raise in your explicit letter, and certainly consider that there is a prospect of the bird condescending to display its talents before you, but such will only take place gradually. No royal road can be laid down to bring this about. You had better continue your present methods, as you appear to have made some slight progress. From your letter I gathered that some forms of your attentions were more acceptable than others (the bird must be your teacher in this); work these for all they are worth, but never carry them to the point of boring the bird; learn from the bird's demeanour when to stop, returning to the attack a little later—thus step by step you must win your way. At the same time, in every family possessing a Parrot there is nearly always one member who receives the principal amount of Polly's affection and talent. However, I certainly consider there is a good prospect, if you still further increase your stock of patience, of Polly ultimately proving much more interesting in your presence than it is at present.

FINCHES WITH BUDGERIGARS (H. A.).—I cannot advise you to put the small Finches and Waxbills with Budgerigars; moreover, Grey Singing Finches and Avadavats would escape through ½in. mesh wire-netting. You could keep White and Grey Java Sparrows, or both, and Red-crested Cardinals with your Budgerigars. Or you could keep pairs each of Madagascar, Blue-winged, and Black-cheeked Lovebirds with them. Though nothing happens perhaps for a time, crippled and slaughtered birds are the inevitable result of keeping the "Small Ornamental Finches" and Budgerigars and other Parrakeets together; at any rate, in restricted space. Even if the original pairs of birds put in the aviary did not interfere with the Finches and Waxbills, their progeny would be sure to work mischief.

A GREAT THIRST (Mrs. D. H.).—While the extreme thirst remains, remove the water from the cage and only permit it to have a drink at intervals, and add 5 drops of aromatic sulphuric acid to each ounce of the general drinking water. Also prepare the following: One teaspoonful of condensed milk, the same quantity of cornflour, one-third teaspoonful of cod liver oil emulsion, two drops of tincture of opium, and sufficient boiling water to bring it to the consistency of ordinary milk; let the bird drink as heartily of this as it pleases two or three times a day. You should not have let so long pass before writing; the cage-tray should be well washed with boiling water, painted over with carbolic acid and then well swilled with cold water, and the voidings should be at once removed and burned. Keep the bird warm and quiet and right out of the way of cool winds and draught. When the thirst yields gradually discontinue the milk preparation.

IDENTITY AND VALUE OF BIRD (E. Simpson).—From your description I make out the bird to be an Orange Bishop or Weaver. Its value at the present time would be about 7s. 6d. Queries are only answered by post according to the rules given at head of "Questions and Answers" columns, to which I must refer you. However, as the stamped addressed envelope did not reach me, you probably have had a reply from the Editor.

GAPING (Pollie).—I do not remember the details of your previous query or my answer, but the bird would be the better for a rather careful dietary. In this war time good and clean seed is none too easy to get. Try the following mixture: One pint shelled monkey-nuts, one quart each hemp, sunflower seed and oats, and half a pint each of giant canary seed and white millet, the whole to be well mixed together. You should be able to procure the above at your corn chandler's. Buy only the best he can supply, or send to one of the large firms advertising in our columns, of course increasing the quantity of each in your order, as the supply will be coming from a distance, and you will have as cheap and wholesome a mixture as you can obtain at the present time—of course, if you can get it to eat more canary and millet seed it will be the better for it. Lightly colour the drinking water with Chemical Food every other day, and keep the bowels well open by an occasional dose of fluid magnesia. As regards your diagram, the position opposite the window by the side of fireplace should be the best position for it, if the window is tight-fitting. Examine the mouth, and if it is at all slimy or furred, spread a little honey and borax over a piece of bread, sponge cake or biscuit, whichever it prefers (or you can put a little direct into the mouth from the end of a small stick). Give this daily till the mouth is well cleansed. If the symptoms become more pronounced, write again at once.

BUDGERIGAR BREEDING (Jay).—(1) Good results have been obtained by both methods, but removing the young as soon as able to fend for themselves should certainly tend to increase the number of young the stock pairs produce, as they are free from any interference by their progeny, which otherwise often materially hinder progress by visiting their parents' nests and other non-malicious mischievousness; therefore, if your convenience permits, two aviaries will be the better plan. (2) A food tray enclosed by a light framing of wood and wire netting, fitted with a drop door, which can be released when the wanted birds are feeding is convenient method of catching individuals. (3) Young birds should take no harm from roosting outdoors at night, at any rate between May and October. Of course, if you have no husks in the open flight, you could always drive in all the birds at sunset and shut them in the shelter for the night during any abnormally severe period. (4) Budgerigar rings were advertised in our columns by Ford, 258, Welford Road, Leicester, specially made to secure what you require; write him for price and particulars. (5) The Madagascar Lovebirds usually agree well with Budgerigars, but a log or small barrel would be a better nesting receptacle for them, as they carry leaves, strips of thin bark, straws, etc., into their receptacle, well lining it with same, and you must supply rubbish of this description. They have been bred many times in captivity, but are not so prolific as Budgerigars. Rudd and others have advertised in CAGE BIRDS small winnowing mills for separating husks from seed; you must get one of these or blow away the husks yourself.

ZEBRA FINCHES FAILING TO REAR (Zebra Finch).—I should suggest supplying the old birds with some live food when they are feeding young, such as live ants' eggs, well scoured maggots, mealworms, and any smooth larvæ, flies, beetles, or spiders your garden supplies, at the same time keeping up a full supply of the items of the ordinary diet. Some pairs at this time are very fond of sponge cake that has been moistened with boiling milk. Millet sprays, too, might help; if you are not in the habit of supplying these do so. Also supply a little of some good make of insectile mixture (soft food), commencing it two or three days before the young are due to hatch. Some pairs are not as good feeders as others, and your trouble may arise solely from this individualism. Should be pleased to hear how you fare with future broods.

WHAT BIRD? (Wyburn).—I think your bird is one of the African Siskins, but I fear it is not possible for me to say which, without either a rough colour diagram or seeing the bird. It may possibly be a Serin, but these mostly have the ground colour of upper parts olive-green. Are you acquainted with the Green Singing Finch? If not, it might be that species, but I should call the upper parts olive-green. So far as one can be definite in such a case, I am of the opinion that your bird is a Totta Siskin. The female is browner and duller generally than the male; she has no yellow on the head; her throat is ashy-yellow, spotted with dark brown. If you are ever in London, and call in at the South Kensington Museum, at the bird room they would show you the skins, and you would be able to either confirm or correct the above identification.

GREY PARROT WEAK ON LEGS (G.N.).—Keep the bowels moving quite freely by occasional doses of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful in the drinking water); what is required is free movement without undue looseness. If the bird will take a little milksop daily for a time it will help matters. Prepare so: two or three pieces of sponge cake (or biscuit), half a teaspoonful of condensed milk, ten drops of cod-liver oil emulsion, and a tablespoonful or a little more of boiling water; stir together, and when cool supply to the bird. The milk sop is not intended to be a permanent part of the dietary, but as soon as the bird is fit again it must be gradually discontinued. When not giving the magnesia, half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in the water will be of help. If the bird is tame, and will permit you to handle it, bathe or soak the feet and legs in hot water (not hot enough to cause discomfort), dry with a soft cloth, and then paint with neat whiskey. Report progress about three weeks hence.

RUNNING AT NOSTRIL (E.F.).—Bathe or spray the nostril with dilute glyco-thymoline daily till the running ceases. You give me no details, and it is quite possible that the trouble arises from digestive troubles. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia every fourth day for a month at least, in the drinking water, and twice a week put half a teaspoonful of syrup of phosphates in the drinking water, but not on the same day that you give the Magnesia. Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. You would find full details as to dieting and treating in the "Grey Parrot" Nutshell, 2½d., post free from our Manager.

NOT TALKING (Liverpool).—While, perhaps, the bird's talent may have been somewhat overstated, it is an undoubted fact that with many Parrots a change of home, everything strange, etc., does throw them off their loquacity, and this only fully returns as they fully settle down and become accustomed to their new owner, surroundings, etc. A tame bird such as you describe, even if not more accomplished than your description infers, should soon increase its talent amid genial surroundings. As you say, its antagonism to a man and friendliness to the other sex, rather points to the bird being a male, and this it very probably is, in spite of the other facts you refer to. I do not think the effects of the journey would be such as to permanently injure its vocal powers; if it appears to have caught a chill, is a little husky, etc., then a few drops of glycerine in the water for a few days may speed matters up a little. On the other hand, if it got a bad scare on the way, you must leave nature to do its own work; a quiet, happy home will ultimately put matters right. It would be well to examine its mouth and throat, and if it is at all slimy or furred, then put a little honey and borax in its mouth daily, from the end of a stick, till the mouth and throat are quite clean. I am of the opinion that when it has been with you a little longer it will be more loquacious, even though its merits may have been exaggerated a little by the vendor; if not, its accomplishments will return. It is a merely a matter of time.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Miss Howman.—Bird died as the result of a fit.

R. Smith.—Letter arrived, but no bird.

V. C. Bentinck.—Senegal Parrot hen. Non-infectious complaint. Cause of death, toxicemia, resulting from absorption of toxic products generated during digestion.

H. C. Perks.—Bad case of septic fever. There was no post-mortem evidence of this in the other bird you sent, but it is evidently connected with it.

Blue Pigeon.—Fatty disease of the liver. The organ was almost entirely converted into fat.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

F. Stothard.—The standard cage for Norwich is 19in. long, 11½ high (outside measurement), and 4½ wide (inside measurement); enamelled inside with Aspinall's "Hedgo Sparrow Blue," black outside; uniform perches, not tipped or marked, drinkers painted black. There is no "standard" cage for British birds, and there is no regulation as to the colour of inside or outside. The National British Bird and Mule Club recommend "uniform" cages, and these are of varied size, according to the birds for which they are intended. The Hon. Sec., Mr. J. P. Carr, 45, Overdale Road, S. Ealing, would doubtless furnish you with particulars if you apply

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

Club Reports.

SOUTH MOOR SOCIAL CLUB.

Meeting, July 4; Mr. Taylor, chair; and a big turn up of members. A discussion on the rules lasted a considerable time, and at the finish it was decided by a big majority that they should go by the board. Decided to get schedule printed by Mr. Riddle, Stanley.—Geo. Lane, Sec.

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting, July 6; Mr. W. G. Fellows, chair. Meeting started very late owing to heavy storm detaining members, therefore consideration of a suggestion from Hastings and St. Leonards re a Southern League was postponed. The energetic whipping up of the hon. sec. connected with E.F. show, helped by the kindness of sundry members who made up a good special list, secured a good entry. Mr. Winter had prepared two striking and well-executed posters for display at the Hall, and Mrs. Hartnell (whose musical treat at the late outing will be long remembered) had kindly consented to give some pianoforte selections. Various votes of thanks closed a cheerful meeting.—G. J. Slade, Asst. Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER FANCY C.C.

Meeting and table show, July 7, Pillar's Cafe, Pink Lane, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Mr. A. Affleck presiding. Entries for table show were below the average, probably due to members putting in extra time on war munitions. Champ. Cl. or Mkd. Yell.: 1, Johnston; 2, 3, Smith and Son. Buff: 1, 4, Johnston; 2, 3, Smith and Son; 5, Greenwell. Green: 1, Greenwell; 2, Affleck. Cinn.: 1, Affleck. Nov., Cl. or Mkd. Yell.: 1, Affleck. Buff: 1, Affleck; 2, 3, 4, Wilson. Green: 1, 2, 5, Render; 3, Wilson; 4, Affleck. Mr. Coulthard judged champion and Mr. G. Greenwell novice. Decided to allot the patronage, and to have a table show at next meeting. Judges: Mr. M. C. Potts, champ.; Mr. C. Farrer, nov.. Messrs. T. Smith, J. Johnston, and W. Espie each promised to give prizes to be competed for over the table shows.—C. Farrer, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Meeting, Headquarters, Rose and Crown Hotel, July 6, Mr. J. Woodall, chair, owing to indisposition of the genial Chairman. There was a good muster to listen to a lecture by Mr. Dean, of Bradford, on society and show management, which proved very interesting. He surprised many of the novices when he detailed the various duties that fall upon the secretary and working committee, in fact one or two made the remark they had no idea there was so much work in running a show. The only drawback to the evening's enjoyment was the early hour we had to finish on account of the early closing, 9.30. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer. The business part of the evening was very important, and involved the question whether we should run our All-England Show as arranged on Nov. 5th and 6th. Everyone present was of the one opinion, "no cancelling." We trust that all the Specialist Clubs will again rally round us and give us their patronage, and that exhibitors will make a note of the date. We shall pay full prize money, and have a list of specials such as never seen before. —John A. T. Woodall, Press Corresp.

LLANELLY C.B.S.

General meeting, July 10, Mr. G. Thomas chair, the attendance was very disappointing. Sec. read correspondence; the books of society having been audited, Sec. gave the accounts in detail, showing a small loss, 7s. 7d., on last show, and a balance at bank of £11 8s. 8d. The auditors spoke in praise of Mr. John for the manner in which the accounts were kept, and the accounts were passed. The benefits from the last show having been intended to go toward the local distress fund, and the Red Cross Society, the members decided to make a grant of 30s. to each fund out of the balance at bank. Mr. Jos. Holmes was re-elected president for the 9th year; vice-presidents left over for future meeting. Chairman, Mr. D. R. Jones, although with the engineers at Northampton, was with one accord re-elected, the members hoping that he may soon once again be amongst us. We miss Councillor D. R. Jones very much at our meetings. Mr. George Thomas was elected for vice-chair. Mr. John informed the meeting that he was not a candidate for re-election as hon. sec. He had been ill since he went under an operation in 1913, and that it would be for the benefit of the society to make another selection, so that he may take a rest after having given over 40 years to the Fancy. Mr. Geo. Thomas was named, but refused the position; in the end Mr. D. J. Crawford was proposed, and after a long discussion Mr. John agreed to hold the position until next meeting, which will be called by post card.—D. John, Sec.

LANCS. AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting, Volunteer Inn, Oldham, July 11. There was a very fair attendance; members from Manchester, Oldham, etc., being present. We had two old-timers present in Messrs. Barker Clegg and F. W. Baker, the latter being the Lizard exhibitor, whose record run of winnings will be hard to beat. The "Lizard King" has at present no idea of coming back to the Fancy in which he played such a conspicuous part some years ago. Mr. Barker Clegg acted as chairman in the absence of President (Mr. A. Bradley). The question of patronage was gone into and Secretary was instructed to see to details. Patronage for Lancashires and Lizards was once again given to Manchester and N.C.O.S. for October 29 and 30. Mr. Robert Barrass (Rochdale) to judge our classes. Decided that owing to the war the rule that four classes for either Lancashires or Lizards be given before we compete for club specials or trophies be suspended, and we are prepared to give our patronage this season to any society providing classes for either variety, even if less than four for each variety, providing dates do not clash. I shall be pleased to hear from any society giving either Lancs or Lizard classes that would like to hold same under our patronage. The question as to holding our championship scheme, brought forward by Mr. A. Bradley, will be decided at the next meeting at Manchester; date will be published in CAGE BIRDS in due course. Mr. Howard was proposed as member. We shall be glad to receive names of more members for either variety, as there is a fine opening for novices especially. Sub. is 5s. yearly; no entrance fees. I shall be pleased to give all information on application to 41, Hall Carr Road, Rawtenstall, Lancs.—J. Rukin, Hon. Sec.

AFTER THE WAR.

Black Canaries from New Zealand will be Seen in England.

OLD readers of Cage Birds will remember the sensation caused at the Crystal Palace Show of February, 1909, by the appearance of a White Canary on the bench. The honour of being the first to exhibit in England this beautiful variety of the universally popular Canary belongs to Mr. Kiesel, Islington, and he showed a second one of the kind at the 1910 Autumn Show of the L. and P.O.S., and afterwards wrote in our columns an account of its breeding. Encouraged by his success in breeding and perpetuating the White Canary, Mr. Kiesel has since tried in the direction of producing "Blacks," and with some measure of success.

The exhibiting of Mr. Kiesel's first specimen inspired a letter by Mrs. Martin, of New Zealand, who stated that she also had an established strain of White Canaries, but had unfortunately missed the honour of being the first to exhibit them in England. Mrs. Martin, like Mr. Kiesel, also turned her attention to the production of Black Canaries, and we had the pleasure recently of announcing that she had been successful, and was sending one of the birds all the way from Australia for our inspection. This estimable intention was frustrated by the outbreak of the war, but, as will be seen by the letter which follows, Mrs. Martin still hopes to avoid, in the case of the Black Canaries, a disappointment similar to that which she experienced in missing the opportunity of being the first to show a White Canary in England. We are sure every one of our readers will join us in the hope that this plucky lady's efforts will be brought to a successful fruition, and that the time may be near when we shall see the results of her labours.

MRS. MARTIN'S LETTER:—

Sir,—I have just received my copy of Cage Birds for April 17, and notice that your correspondent Mr. H. C. Brook enquiries about Black Canaries. I have intended for many months to write you about my Black Canaries, and explain why I never sent one for your inspection. The bird referred to was to have left here (in company with others) just as the war broke out, and I felt that under the circumstances it would be most foolish to risk it, as at that time I had only the one "Black" self. Last season, however, I was most successful in breeding them, and I have now seven self "Blacks" and about a dozen fouls, so as soon as the war is over I hope to send over a nice consignment of them, and also of my Whites, with which I have been more than ever successful, having much improved the type (crossing into extra long Yorkshires). I have reared 37, and scarcely any of them have a dark feather. Last season I succeeded for the first time in getting pink-eyed clear Whites, and also one cinnamon-marked pink-eyed White.

As I believe the Whites in England are not increasing, I hope to send home some of my best Whites when the "Blacks" go, but I don't care to send them while the war risks are so great. I hope the "Blacks" will be in time to be the first exhibited in England, as undoubtedly I am the first to breed them, and they have been exhibited for the last two years in Wellington, New Zealand.

As I mentioned in my previous article, they are not really Black, but a dark blue-grey, with black wings, tails, and spangles—the hens and the buffs showing a good deal of brown. Some of the young of last year are much darker than those of previous years, which is encouraging. I hope it will not be long before you see these birds.

Maud S. Martin,
(Mrs. John Martin).

New Zealand.

"Cage Birds" in Australia.

We have had pleasure in appointing as our representative in Australia Mr. J. Currah, whose name is well-known to English readers, especially to fanciers in Newcastle, in which town Mr. Currah lived for many years before leaving us for the great southern island-continent. Mr. Currah's address is Marian Street, Killara, Sydney, New South Wales, and yearly subscriptions to our journal, 8s. 8d. post free, may be booked with him. The copies will be sent weekly direct to the subscribers.

I am glad to say, writes Mr. J. B. Kerr, New Barnet, that I have had a most successful season. There is not a bad bird in my lot of 20 youngsters. I have bred for size as well as type and quality, and can put down a dozen among which it would be difficult to choose the winner.

HOW TO COLOUR-FEED NORWICH CANARIES.

By C. STUBBS.

NOW the moulting season is upon us, fanciers' attention will turn from the breeding to the colour feeding of their birds, so a few notes on this subject may not come amiss, and my object in writing these lines is to try and help those fanciers that are perhaps colour feeding birds for the first time. In the first place it is absolutely necessary to breed for colour, that is, you must have some green blood in your birds, otherwise no amount of pepper will bring forth that rich colour so much desired on the show bench. I have found that the beginner as a rule over-feeds his birds with pepper, thinking no doubt to get a better colour. This is a great mistake, as well as a waste of food. Last year I got a grand colour in my birds, so I will tell exactly how I fed my birds.

To every pound of cold pepper I added 2ozs. of hot Natal, thoroughly mixing it together, and afterwards storing it away in an airtight tin. To one hard-boiled egg and a slice of bread I mixed three heaped up teaspoonfuls of the colour food and two of soft sugar. This I well beat together with a fork, taking care not to make it into a paste. I always prepare my food overnight to give to the birds next morning. Allow each bird one teaspoonful of the prepared food every day during the moult, and sprinkle a pinch of maw seed on the top. I always take my seed hoppers off in the morning, putting them back at mid-day; this, in my opinion, does the birds no harm, and they generally eat up the colour food much better. I have found that no matter how palatable you make up your food, some birds will not touch it if they can have their fill with seed. During colour feeding, do not give your birds green food, or they will very likely be troubled with diarrhœa, as the colour food is in itself a vegetable preparation.

The maw seed mentioned answers a double purpose; the birds eat the food better, and, being of a binding nature, the food does not pass through the birds so quickly. Twice a week I add to the drinking water sulphate of iron, a piece about the size of half a split pea is enough; this is a good tonic, and helps to mix the colour. I usually give my birds towards the end of the moult a pinch of linseed, as this helps to put a gloss on the plumage.

When giving birds colour food, use a vessel that a teaspoonful about half fills, the birds will then not have the chance of throwing it about the cage bottom and picking it up when it has turned sour, which they usually do when the vessel is filled to the top. Another important thing is the bath. This must be used freely all through the moult, unless, of course, the weather is cold, and then you must use your own judgment and pick the warmest days; it is a splendid thing to get a good sheen on the birds, and if you can get clean rainwater, so much the better.

When to Start Feeding.

You can generally tell when the old birds are about to drop into a moult, for at such time you will find a flight or tail feather in the cage bottom; they will also go off their song, and sit a bit mopey on the perch. It is time then to start them on the colour food, but the earlier the better, so as to get it well into the blood.

I have found that the youngsters from the early rounds begin to break up when they are about ten to twelve weeks old, and the later ones 7 or 8 weeks old; they should all then be put on the food. Young birds moult ont best when about four are kept in a cage together. They seem to eat the food up one against the other, but beware of the pluckers. Last year I had several of these, so I put them all in one cage together, and not one single feather did they touch on one another. Whether it will always answer I do not know, but I shall certainly give it another trial.

Of course, if you have a very promising bird, it is safest to moult it by itself, as you cannot always be in the room, and the mischief is done in no time. However, all my best birds were moulted four in a cage last year, and, call it luck if you like, I had no trouble at all with them.

When you are colour feeding, it is necessary to darken the room, which can be done by hanging some sort of light material over the window. Some fanciers prefer covering their cage fronts three parts the way down, but I don't think the birds get enough air that way, unless, of course, you get an odd bird or two go into a very early moult when it is best, as you cannot very well keep your room in semi-darkness when you have hens bringing up their young.

I have heard several people say that it is cruel to colour feed birds, but my birds never appear to be in better health than when they are being colour fed. In conclusion, I wish Cage Birds every success, and I hope fanciers generally have had a real good breeding season.

A Useful Reference Book.

Judging by letters recently received, the breeding of birds other than Canaries in captivity is becoming more and more popular, and several readers have written in the impression that they have been the first to succeed in breeding some particular species or hybrid. Those who are interested in experiments in either direction should procure Mr. Wesley T. Page's "Species which have reared young, and Hybrids which have been bred in captivity in Great Britain." This useful work, which is published by the Avian Press, Ashbourne, is the outcome of most patient research by Mr. Page, and is a complete record of successes up to 1914, the date of its publication; the price is 2s. 6d., or post free 2s. 9d.

The Cinnamon Canary.

"The Bird of Royal Blood."

A Paper read at the meeting of the Western Counties O.S., Plymouth, June 15th, by Mr. A. B. Brown, Plymouth.

THE title of my subject is: "The Bird of Royal Blood." The Cinnamon is one of our oldest breeds, and one we know least about. There is no known record as to whence it came, or how it was bred. Some say it is a sport of the Green Canary, but of this there is no definite proof, and in contradiction to the theory it may be pointed on that there has never been a number of Cinnamons found together in a wild state, whereas the Green is common under such circumstances. This should be sufficient evidence to show the Cinnamon was not originally bred from the Green. It may be that the similarity of markings is responsible for the idea, as both are marked in the same way; be that as it may, a pair of Greens will never produce a Cinnamon feather, if the Greens were entirely without Cinnamon blood. It is also the most interesting variety we possess; handed down to us a mystery, a mystery it remains, and a most fascinating breed by reason of its peculiarities.

When speaking of the "Cinnamon," the Norwich type is generally meant, and, although there are, of course, Cinnamons in other varieties, this type shows a Cinnamon off to the best advantage. It takes its name from the cinnamon spice, which it resembles in colour when colour-fed. It has not always been known by this name, for Hervieux, a very old writer on the Canary, speaks of the Cinnamon as the "ash-coloured Canary-bird with red eyes," and his book was not translated and published in London until the year 1718. P. Boswell called it the "flaxen-colour Canary," others mention it as the ash-coloured or dove-coloured bird with red eyes, and to this day it is better known amongst some of the North-eonntry miners as the Dun, or Quaker.

Ancestors with Bad Reputations.

In the far remote days of the old writers the Cinnamon did not bear a good name. Brehm said "the bird with red eyes is weak," Bechstein "the bird with red eyes is not strong," while another old writer asserted that the Cinnamon hen had dim sight, and if it ever had any young it could not see to feed them, and so starved the whole nest.

This cannot be said of the Cinnamon of to-day; not only has it good sight, but it is a splendid breeder and the best of feeders, rearing nest after nest with success. This all goes to prove either that our forefathers of the Fancy could not have been conscientiously careful in their choice of healthy stock, or that the supply was very limited owing to difficulty of communication with distant fanciers, thus causing inbreeding with unsuitable stock. The latter assumption seems reasonable, as there were then no such facilities for quick communication between breeders as in these days of railways, and there was no such great help to make known our wants as an advertisement in the fanciers' caterer, CAGE BIRDS.

The Hall-Mark of the Cinnamon.

There is one outstanding feature of the Cinnamon which in the pure specimen is always present, i.e., the pink eye, and particular mention was made of it by writers of by-gone centuries. No matter what garb it assumes, or what type it represents, the peculiarity remains, and, although the Cinnamon is no longer known as the red-eyed bird, the bird which possesses the pink eyes is undoubtedly a Cinnamon. The red eye is as much the hall mark of Cinnamon blood today as was the case in the far off days when those ancient writers, for want of a better name, spoke of it as the red-eyed Canary bird.

The knowledge of this insistance of the red eye is very valuable to the breeder who is in search of pure stock. Birds may be glorious examples of beauty, but unless they possess the pink eye there is not the desired amount of Cinnamon blood present to guarantee the breeding of pure self or whole-coloured Cinnamon young. This matter must be borne in mind, as the successful breeding of these birds depends chiefly on this, and the knowledge is particularly useful in the selecting of Cinnamon hens, for these may be whole-coloured Cinnamons, but may contain very little real Cinnamon blood.

On the other hand, a Cinnamon-feathered cock carries his pedigree with the Cinnamon feather, as it is impossible to breed a Cinnamon-feathered cock unless there be a good percentage of Cinnamon blood present in both parents. To the inexperienced this matter of the pink or cinnamon eye may be difficult to detect, as in adult birds, when seen in a poor light, the eye appears ordinary in colour, but if the bird is held in such a position as to allow the light to fall on the eye in a slanting direction the reddish tint is easily perceivable. In the case of young Cinnamons, the pink colour is seen showing through the eyelids immediately they are hatched from the shell.

A Real Transformation.

The modern show specimen is far removed from the Cinnamon of long ago. It has lost its reputedly bad character with its dull drab coat. The transformation is very real, not only as regards stamina and colour, but also in respect of size and type. All this has been brought about by a skilful and systematic manipulation of the stock year by year, until the patient enterprise of the breeder has met with reward in the production of the beautiful exhibition bird of to-day.

In the absence of proof of its origin, it does not appear to be out of place to submit a theory as to what the Cinnamon really is. None of us can fail to observe that in all branches of life red colour species are always fully represented. In human races we have a good percentage of units with red or reddish-brown hair. In horses red is represented by chestnut, roan, bay, etc.; in cattle, we have our famous South Devons; then we have the red setter, a dog whose coat is full of red colour, while amongst fowls the same colour is common, especially in the game varieties. In all the Canary tribes we have the brown of the Cinnamon, so why should not the Cinnamon be acknowledged as the game representative of the Canary? All admit the Cinnamon can be grafted on to any other variety of Canary, and also that none other has the power to implant itself on the Cinnamon. This should be conclusive proof, and should be suffieient to earn it its title, "The King of Canaries."

A Paper read by Mr. G. H. THURLEY (Tottenham), before the members of the City and Suburban A.C.B.

YOU may remember that from Nos. 1 and 2 pairs I got a percentage of 45 yellows. In one of those nests the 3 yellows were all hens. Here was some ground-work for me to start on if I had not, in the words of a celebrated statesman, been "ploughing a lonely furrow." Could I have obtained one or two buff cocks from birds with a pre-disposing power to throw yellows, I consider it would have put me on the right track, but unfortunately I was unable to do so, and I had no bird of my own that came up to my requirements. If I could have done this, and followed it up strictly on those lines, I firmly believe that I could in three or four generations have got a good majority of yellows. Of course the same holds good for buffs, but as I was working for yellows I have not made such a careful study of these.

It is possible some one may suggest that this will affect exhibition points. Not at all; these points can still be just as carefully bred for and watched over, and we shall get additional interest as regards colour. Before leaving this point, I may say my results this season so far appear to coincide with last year's.

Another problem, or rather perplexing point which is worth tackling, is the question of sex, and I should like to say a few words with regard to the influence the age of the parent birds has on the sex of their progeny. Some two or three years ago a paper was read, I believe by a lady, to some London society. I put a copy of it away for security, and I did the work so successfully that now I want it I can't lay my hands upon it. My records here, again, are not, I fear, of a sufficiently lengthy period for us to draw any satisfactory conclusions from them, but I will give them to you in the hope that if they are somewhat negative they will bring out other breeders' results:—

From cocks and hens 1 year, unflighted, 57 per cent. cocks, 43 per cent. hens; cocks 2 years and unflighted hens, 73 per cent. cocks, 27 per cent. hens; cocks 2 years and hens ditto, sexes equal; cocks 3 years and unflighted hens, all cocks; cocks 2 years and hens 3 years, 62 per cent. cocks, 38 per cent. hens; cocks 1 year and hens 3 years, 66 per cent. cocks and 33 per cent. hens.

Forming an opinion simply on these results alone suggests that if, as a good many of us do, we wish to breed hens, we should use both non-flight birds, or birds of equal ages, for it will be noticed that where over year cocks and non-flighted hens were used, there was a large percentage of cocks in the offspring. Whether these results are in accordance with those of other breeders I am unable to say, but it is a point I am watching very carefully. It was my intention to have added some notes on the fertilisation of eggs, but not wishing to weary and bore you unduly I decided to omit them.

In conclusion I have a suggestion to make, and although perhaps all the members in the room may not be as enthusiastic on these points as I am, I hope that some will fall in with my proposal. I take it that this association is one of the most active, most go-ahead, and most flourishing societies in the country. It is one to which we ought to be proud to belong, and it is my opinion that it would only be worthy of us, and would have great weight in the Canary world, if we set ourselves to work to keep accurate records on the lines I have suggested, and then, when we have come to some definite conclusion, as no doubt we shall, as to the principles underlying these laws, we publish them as evidence collected by the City and Suburban.

I am fully aware that professors and students of the Mendelian laws may, because we are not working in a laboratory, try to minimise and belittle our efforts, but our results will have been obtained from actual experience and not from a study of theory. My idea is that one evening towards the end of the year, when questions of sex, colour, etc., have settled themselves, we should meet here and communicate our results to perhaps a small sub-committee, and these should be carefully tabulated and published as the result of our investigations.

WASTING DISEASES IN CAGE BIRDS.

Author of "The Science of Living," Manuals of Canary, Poultry, etc., Diseases, "How to Feed Canaries," etc.

THE cage birds which are received by me for post-mortem examination may be divided into two classes, those which are too fat and those which are too thin, but by far in the least proportion are those which are too thin. Owing to the fulness of the plumage of cage birds, especially of Canaries, there may be loss of muscular tissues to the extent of exhaustion, without the owner of a bird having become aware that the bird was wasting.

In cases of wasting there is usually more or less looseness of the bowels, in addition to the loss of muscular tissue, and the excrement has an unnatural appearance. In some cases the bowels are very much relaxed, and the excrement is of a dark-greenish colour, but at first watery, and unusually dark in colour, and when the excrement is dark green the loss of muscular tissue may be rather rapid. In severe cases the bird soon becomes "heapy," that is, it stands on its perch most of its time with its head drawn in, and its plumage standing out from its body so as to give it an unnaturally round appearance. When a bird first commences to waste it may be fairly active, but soon becomes gradually less so, and should the wasting continue it remains stationary on its perch most of the time and has a very dejected appearance, and a sleepy one too. The onset of the disease is very insidious in most cases, so that a bird may become quite emaciated before it has been noticed to be ailing.

The Cause of the Trouble.

Simply stated, the cause of caged birds losing muscular tissue is unsuitable dieting, with its consequent malnutrition. The bird may have had a superabundance of food, food containing a superabundance of digestible material, but in it a great deficiency of muscle-forming elements in proportion to the digestible solids, and in order for this to be made evident it is necessary to describe the process of nutrition and digestion, together with the composition of the foodstuffs usually fed to cage birds.

In the first place, all substances swallowed rest in the crop, which is merely an enlargement of the gullet down which food and other substances pass from the mouth to the stomach. The crop resembles a hopper from which the stomach and gizzard are supplied with successive quantities of material for conversion into a more or less nutritive pulp. From the crop the food first passes into the stomach, which is supplied with glands which secrete and pour out a fluid which softens most substances, and prepares them for the action of the gizzard, and also in other ways assists in the process of digestion.

The gizzard, in the case of seed eating birds, in addition to grinding its contents, with the aid of some harder substances, presses and forces the most fluid portions through a valvular opening into the upper part of the bowel. In the bowel the semi fluid pulp from the gizzard is mixed with bile and other secretions which assist in the process of digestion, and eventually nearly the whole of the contents of the bowel are, or should be, in sufficiently minute division for absorption into the blood. The blood should circulate freely through every gland and tissue in the body, and each should extract from the blood nearly the exact quantity of suitable material necessary for building it up, and for its maintenance in a high state of efficiency for the performance of its natural functions. It is absolutely necessary for there to be a sufficiency of nourishment in the bowel from time to time, and for it to remain there long enough to become absorbed into the blood.

Anyone who studies this matter can hardly fail to perceive that a bird suffering from diarrhœa, even to a limited continual extent, cannot be sufficiently nourished, and as a consequence there must be more or less loss of muscular tissue. This must, as a matter of course, be intensified when there is a deficiency of flesh-forming elements in the diet supplied. In some foodstuffs there is only about one-sixth of digestible solid flesh-forming elements where there should be three-fifths. I say three-fifths, because in all diets naturally provided about three-fifths of the digestible solids are flesh-forming elements, therefore it is safe to assume that, at least, nearly that proportion should be in the diet of any creature.

There is another very important point that it is necessary not to lose sight of, and that in the great preponderance of digestible solids in proportion to the indigestible solids, nearly seven to one. In no naturally provided diet is there ever 50 per cent. of digestible solids. An excess of digestible solids in a diet, which are deficient in flesh-forming elements, is the chief predisposing cause of disease in caged birds. An excess of cheesy, fatty matter becomes deposited in the kidneys, liver, spleen, and other organs, and herein lies another cause of wasting. When an excess of cheesy matter is deposited in important organs they fail efficiently to perform their natural functions, and the blood becomes more or less impure, and acts as an irritant in the liver, from which irritant matter is discharged into the bowel. The result is chronic bilious diarrhœa, a common ailment of caged birds, and more especially of Parrots.

It is very surprising that Parrots should be passing a greenish-coloured excrement for months, and then only to be wasting chiefly about the thighs. In all these cases the Parrot is the subject of fatty disease of the kidneys, and mostly of the liver too. However, later on the Parrot is liable to have attacks of cramp, and soon after this a whitish diarrhœa is set up, that is, an excess of urea is passed. It has then become too late to adopt any kind of treatment with any great chance of a cure being effected.

It is the same in the case of other cage birds which have been continuously unsuitably dieted; the same symptoms supervene, with the same ultimate results. The only chance of a cage bird living as long as it should would be feeding with a diet in which there would be a large percentage of non digestible material. It has always been a great puzzle to me how some birds live for a rather long time on an exclusive diet of millet, and it can only be owing to the slow digestion of it, or the partial digestion of the digestible solids in it. The same birds when living in a naturally wild state have quite a different diet. There is an idea prevalent that a creature can adapt itself to living on an unnatural diet, but I must confess inability to understand how that may be when the foodstuffs do not contain anywhere nearly the composition of any natural diet, although it is very easily understood that a great variety of foodstuffs may, as a whole, form a nearly balanced diet, that is, nearly enough balanced to support life for quite its natural span.

Correspondence.

Two Pairs of Twin Canaries!

Sir,—Having read A. J. Baker's letter in Cage Birds of July 3 with reference to Twin Canaries, I write to say that I have been breeding this season with a pair of Yorkshires, and the first nest had four eggs; result, four healthy birds. Their second nest contained four eggs, and you can imagine my surprise when I found I had six birds out of the four eggs hatched June 20; the birds are all alive and well. When the young left the nest, it was quite noticeable that two birds were short of feathers on breast, and two were short of feathers around the head, while the other two, who were not twins, were well fledged and a little larger. The mother is now on her third nest with six eggs, and I hope she will not surprise me with twins again.

What a New Reader Thinks.

Sir,—It is but recently that your most valuable and useful paper, Cage Birds, was introduced to my notice, and after carefully reading one or two numbers I decided to invest in two or three of the books you publish, including that beautifully illustrated and helpful work, "Cage Bird Hybrids." This wonderful volume is, I find, crammed with useful advice, and is all you claim for it, and more. In a way it resembles an attractive novel, for one doesn't know when to put it down, once one begins to read it. For those who do not care to spend so much the smaller work is just the book for British bird lovers, i.e., "The British Bird Manual," at 2s. I am an old Canary fancier, and used to breed Cinnamons thirty years ago, but never studied British birds until a clergyman friend persuaded me to make a start recently.

The Grit of the Fancier-Soldier.

Africa, France, and the Dardanelles.

Sir,—I am sorry to say that one of the members of the Bolton Roller Soc., and of the Provincial Roller Club, Private James Scott, is posted as missing in the Dardanelles. He was a very successful breeder and exhibitor of Roller Canaries, carrying off several prizes the season before the war broke out. He was a reservist, was called out on the declaration of war, and was in the thick of the fighting in France for four months. He was invalided home with frost-bitten feet, but after getting all right he volunteered to go out to the Dardanelles, and four days after landing was posted as missing. He belonged to the Lancashire Fusiliers, and had been through the Boer War. I am sure all Roller fanciers will join us in hoping that after all he may turn up safe and sound.

Nearly Cleared Out But Still Going Strong.

Sir,—I am glad to inform you I have had a most successful season with Norwich. I tried to clear all my stock last winter, and through my advert. in Cage Birds I sold nearly 50, but at the commencement of the breeding season I had left on hand five cocks and seven hens. Not having much spare time now, owing to the war, I decided to let them take their chance, and feed the young on Spratt's Cod Liver Oil Food, which I saw advertised in Cage Birds. I obtained a 7lb. bag and have had splendid results. Two hens died through egg-binding, and this left me with five pairs. I have 25 young doing for themselves, six in the nest, and some eggs still to hatch. I hope to give you the final result at the end of the season, as I think fanciers would be glad to hear more of this food, which is very cheap, and I find most satisfactory.

Which Singer is Supreme?

Sir,—One of the "good old annuals," and one which crops up almost as regularly as the ultra-early Cuckoo or the extra late Swallow, is the question, "Which is the most talented singer among British birds?" If we take heed of the poets and novelists, there is but one answer, "The Nightingale," but when we are guided by our own sense of hearing—well, "there are others." Many of us find notes in the song of the Nightingale which jar on our ears, and, like a flaw in anything, detract from the excellence of the song as a whole. In consequence, we are inclined to dispute the title of the Nightingale to its poetic designation "Queen of Song" (it should, of course, be "King of Song," but that is a detail), and to listen elsewhere for our ideal songster. Two claimants to royal supremacy immediately join issue, the Blackcap and the Garden Warbler. The exquisito "flutiness" of the song of the latter bird appeals at once to a sensitive ear, and there are many who would accept the Garden Warbler as the best of all British songsters. Personally, while bowing to the charm of this delightful musician, my vote is for the Blackcap. The song of the Blackcap is brighter and more lively than, and in its deeper notes yields little, if any, to that of the Garden Warbler. The Blackcap, therefore, is always in my mind when I see or hear raised the question of absolute supremacy. I have, however, lately come across a contribution to the "Glasgow Evening Citizen," which puts the whole argument so nicely that I think it cannot fail to be of interest to readers of our ever-popular journal Cage Birds; it is as follows:—

"Predilections are hard to overcome, and it would be a hopeless task to try to reconcile the partialities of individuals with regard to the respective merits of our song-birds. The Nightingale's pre-eminence gives point to the saying that there is always room at the top. The second place, however, proves to be an apple of discord to be wrangled for by the protagonists of various species. Still, the Blackcap Warbler has had, in the book field at any rate, most reputation as our second-best vocalist. Perhaps it may be said without being provocative that at its best it is hard to beat.

In my experience no birds vary so much in power of song as Blackcaps. At its best the song is full, clear, and ebullient. At its worst it is a thin treble, like an indifferent Hedge Sparrow's. There is nothing strange or rare in songs varying among birds of the same species, but in the Blackcap this feature, common to all birds, becomes remarkable. Birds are moody, just like men, and often we cannot tell what is in the local circumstances, or the weather, or the psychology of the individual that makes for volubility or the reverse. But the Blackcap's reputation for moodiness goes away back to Gilbert White's time, and it is a characteristic that does not change as time changes. The best notes in the Blackcap's repertory combine the clearness of the piercing shafts of song of the Robin with something of the fulness of the Nightingale. It is the clearness in the Blackcap's notes, compared with the flute-like notes of the Garden Warbler, that helps the listener to distinguish between them in five out of any six cases."

Intelligence in Birds.

Sir,—Would a Bishop tell a fib? That is a question that it isn't "in the public interest" to answer. As Mr. Teschemaker is good enough to remember the correspondence of some time ago, perhaps he will also remember that the correspondence took place under the heading of "Has a Bird a Conscience"?

As one of the sceptical correspondents referred to, I would ask him if he also remembers that I did not deny an amount of intelligence in birds individually, but that I pointed out the psychological difference between the words intelligence and conscience. Nuttal gives as the meaning of conscience—the sense of right and wrong, while intelligence means skill, or knowledge. A bird may have skill, but does not know the difference between right and wrong. A Parrot, a thieving Jackdaw or Magpie, a performing Redpoll which draws its own food, they all show intellectual capacity; but a thieving Magpie has no more conscience than the thieving hordes of the Kaiser. The Flycatcher he mentioned as leaving her young to die may—or may not—have shown intelligence, but she manifested a woeful lack of love for her offspring. She had not the sense of right and wrong—conscience; and she would have helped Mr. Teschemaker's argument better if she had killed two of her young and brought up the other three—as she "knew" she couldn't possibly rear the five. The professional up-to-date Bill Sykes is very intelligent, but he must be without a conscience. Well, what about Elijah? Surely he doesn't wish to ———. But, no; Mr. Teschemaker knows that credulity is not my weak point!

Some letters received in competition for the prize offered in last week's issue. A further selection will appear next week.

Sir,—I should say Novice has not troubled much about reading articles in Cage Birds from time to time. If he will do as I tell him he will never see a parasite of any description, either at breeding or any other time. Thoroughly clean out cage or cages with a good solution of diluted carbolic acid. Then clean racks with the same; dip all ends of racks in same; distemper inside cage with Hall's, adding a pennyworth of turpentine to it, also do the racks with same. Then get two pennyworth of Russian tallow and 2d. of naphtha, melt the tallow in a jar, and add the naphtha. When cold and set, take a piece of rag and sponge, and rub all round the outside of cage, and fill up joints, and you will never be troubled again. Last but not least, use red mite perches. See advertisement Cage Birds Annual, 1915. Also spray your birds with quassia, and if they are breeding, wash the nest pan with same, and put a bit of the chip in the bottom of nest pan; mites don't like it. Any fancier can inspect my cages at any time.

J. Taylor.

Sir,—The way I manage is to put plenty of Keating's insect powder in the nest before the hen goes to hatch. When the young are about a fortnight old I procure a new nest pan with lining, and form a nest with moss or other substance. I put Keating's in nest as before, place the young in it, and I find this keeps all pests away. I would advise the party concerned to take the old and nest of young each in the hand and sprinkle the insect powder on the birds affected, taking care of the birds' eyes. If this course be adopted, I hope he will write and state results, which I know from experience will be satisfactory. I may mention that I have myself gained much useful knowledge from Cage Birds, and I wish it all success.

J. Lyons.

Sir,—I remember having a nest literally walking away. I consulted several big authorities, and their chief remedy was washing with either one disinfectant or another—quassia chips and sheep dip being the chief two. I tried washing until I was sick of it, and all to no purpose, besides running a big risk, especially with young birds (and old when in the moult). Now, if Novice will get the small bellows and some Keating's Powder, catch each bird, and give it a good dusting, he will have no lice in less than a week, if dusted each day. I am a user of this powder in every nest while the hen is sitting.

Ed. Ball.

Sir,—During my somewhat lengthy experience in the Fancy, I have at times had one nest unaccountably infested. The remedy is very simple. The most sure, safe, and speedy cure is Keating's Insect Powder. Catch the birds, if they are on the perches, rub the powder into the feathers liberally, starting at the head, round the neck, down back, and well below wings, body and tail, one application is sufficient. When youngsters in the nest are seen to be infested, they should be kept isolated until eleared, as the lice quickly spread from bird to bird, on contact, not otherwise. Spread a newspaper on the table during operation. The lice will drop off the birds. The eage the birds are put into should be well covered on bottom with sawdust, to be cleaned out next day.

Frank F. Lawson.

Sir,—Being a breeder of Canaries for about thirty years, I used to be troubled a great deal with these insects, till a friend of mine advised me to try Stockholm tar, which I did, and I have never seen one for the past nine or ten years. Paint inside the nest pans with Stockholm tar, and then press the lining to it.

W. Mann.

Sir,—The very best and cheapest way is to get a friendly baker to put the cage and all belonging to it (excepting the birds, of course) in his hot oven for a few minutes. This, I guarantee, will kill and cook all live stock, and destroy their eggs, without damaging the cages.

G. Gibbons.

Ramsden's pure tasteless pepper for this season is, as usual, in every way first-class, and the same remark can justly be applied to this vendor's hot Natal pepper. Samples which have just been sent us establish it beyond any doubt. The colouring properties of "R.P." are wonderful, while it is perfectly ground and retains just the right proportion of natural oil; further, it is ground from garden pods of this season's growth, and guaranteed (as in other years) under the Food and Drugs Act as absolutely pure and unadulterated, a fact to which its aroma and appearance bear striking testimony. It is to be obtained of Mr. J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London, S.W. Another very excellent Ramsden speciality is "Lacphos," a tonic building-up food with milk powder as its basis, one pound of it representing the concentrated nourishment of 35 pints of fresh milk. "Lacphos" is particularly valuable to mix amongst the soft-food used for rearing young birds, and for moulting purposes, ensuring strong, well-nourished birds.

REVIEW OF SCHEDULE.

Woolton (Lancs.).—Aug. 2. Judge, J. Lloyd. 7 classes: Brit. 6, A.O.V. 1. Fee 1s. Prizes, 8s., 4s., 2s., if 9 entries; half if less. Entries close July 27, to J. Keen, Woolton, Liverpool.

A Persevering Greenfinch.

Sir,—In my aviary I have a pair of Greenfinches. About the 3rd June the hen began to build, but the other birds destroyed the nest. She began again, but with the same result; she then laid an egg on the ground which was broken. I then took a Chaffinches' nest, which I had by me, and stuck it in a branch in the aviary, and the Greenfinch laid three eggs in it, which all came off, and now I have three young Greenfiuches.

"Cage Birds" at the Front.

Sir,—Just a line to thank you for the welcome copies of Cage Birds; the troops liked them very much. I gave one to every company in our battalion. I hope the boys are having a good breeding season; I shall be glad when I can start again. Birds are plentiful here, and the Swallow sings grandly; he will sit on a piece of barbed wire and sing for two or three minutes. I wish you and the staff the best of luck.

My Cuckoos and Some Other Birds.

By Mrs. SARGEANT (Worcester).

I HAVE been intending to write for some time past, as I see the Cuckoo is still in evidence sometimes, and that some curious questions are still asked about it. I have still got one of the two which were brought to me out of the country last year, but, just like the others, he is not in good condition so far as regards the tail and wing feathers, and he has not yet got all his grey bib. He looks healthy otherwise, and has just the same pretty ways of "snapping his beak for a kiss, etc.," as the old one and the others had.

Jimmy, my large Tawny Owl, is still alive and well. I saw, a few weeks ago, someone was asking how to feed one. I feed mine on lights; the best sort is a side of sheep's lights; this will last three or four days; in fact, two sides are Master Jimmy's allowance for the week. He gets a bird, a mouse, or a young chicken occasionally, and he is coming through his moult splendidly again. He likes a bath, and gets a washing up tin full of water every day; he rubs his nose in the soil on the bottom of his house before making his plunge.

I should like to speak a word in favour of the Crow, seeing that the Corby Crow is my family crest with the motto "Deus paset Corvos" (God feeds the Ravens). Æsop, in his fables, if he makes him a vain bird, also makes him a clever one, for he tells the story of one who, being thirsty, had flown with joy to a jug of water. The water being low in the jug, and the jug narrow in the neck, he filled it up with pebbles till he raised the water to the brim and quenched his thirst.

My mother told me lately that a pair of Crows had fed on the lawn in front of her window for five years, and were quite tame, coming on to the window sill for bits of fat she put out for them. Sometimes they brought one or perhaps two young ones with them in the season.

The Crow in India.

I have heard quite a lot of interesting things about Crows lately from a soldier's wife who had been some years in India. There the Hooded Crow is a much protected bird, for the natives think it is a sacred bird, and that their souls pass into it when they die. They are also the city scavengers, and great thieves, stealing fowls' eggs off the table, and carrying two at a time away in their claws, not on the end of their beaks.

Once she hit one with a stick and it dropped on the floor as though dead. She told a native boy to throw it away, but he shrank up in a corner and said: "Me no kill Crow; mem sahib, me no kill Crow; me no throw Crow away." So she picked the Crow up herself, took him out of doors, and flung him on a heap of rubbish, when with a great "Caw Caw!" he flapped his wings and was gone, leaving her frightened with amazement.

I think I have read that a Skylark will feign death when in danger, and that reminds me that my old Skylark (she is now nine years old) is again building. She is making a much more compact nest this year, but she is so old and waddles along so slowly, sometimes getting her feet bound up in the bits of grass, that it is proving a long job. My hen Yellowhammer is still alive, this is her ninth year in captivity; is this a record? I remember seeing in the correspondence column of Cage Birds that these birds rarely lived more than four years in captivity. I also have a hen Chaffinch, and the two hen Bullfinches building; and I will tell later if I have any luck with them.

Young Bird Show, held July 7, in Ree's Rooms. The entry was fairly good considering the members had not experienced the best of fortune. Borders came up strong and some very neat specimens were staged, spl. best in section going to Mr. Hurst's buff, a grand all-round bird, with a capital head and good style. Spl. best York. was won by a very fine buff of good size and quality put down by Mr. Bacon; best Bullf. or Greenf. to Mr. Hurst's Bullfinch; and Mr. Mitchell secured spl. best Brit. with a capital Goldf., a good all-round bird, full of quality. Mr. Martin makes a good Sec., is a keen fancier, and had everything in order. Mr. H. Norman judged.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Once more the members of the City and Suburban succeeded in holding, July 3, a very fine exhibition of young Canaries, Hybrids and British Birds. Entries numbered about 240, a most excellent gathering, and showing plainly the keenness of the London fanciers. Quality was well up to the usual high standard, in fact in some cases, notably in the novice section, we noticed a distinct advance. The feature of the show was the wonderful class of 40 Clear or Ticked Novice Yorks. Mr. Hannaford won with a very fine specimen of wonderful length. Mr. Runchman put down in the other novice class a grand Cinnamon-marked bird, bred from a well-known winning hen. Sp. best Yorks. and best bird were secured by Mr. F. W. Ayres with a fine big yellow, the envy of all. As usual, Norwich were well to the front, numbering almost as many as the slim ones; quality was excellent, pinched heads and long bodies being notably absent. The clears were a fine lot, that sterling fancier, Mr. F. J. Martin, heading the class with a bonny buff, a bird not particularly taking at first glance, but one that improves upon acquaintance. Messrs. Smith, Curtis, and Butterfield all staged some good typical birds, but the special in this section was secured by a very fine ticked bird put down by Mr. E. C. Offord. It posssesses suhstance, bold head and well filled neck, and should do well with a good moult. Mrs. Stopher won sp. best Ladies' Canary with the winner of the clear class (novices). Borders came up very well indeed with three nice classes. A few very good Scotch Fancies were sent in by Miss L. Jolliffe. In the British there was a capital class of Goldies; sp. best in section went to Mr. Hobden's well-known Bullfinch, in grand fettle. Mr. Hobden's winning Linnet is a capital specimen, and was well put down. As usual, the management was all that could be desired, the genial sec., Mr. V. Wynn, with his winning way of coaxing the entries, was again in a large measure responsible for the success of the show. He received encouragement and able assistance from Mr. and Mrs. Thynne, Messrs. Curtis, Overman, Robertson, Runchman, etc. Mr. J. Robson judged Canaries, and Mr. H. Norman the British and Foreign.

Phipps; Nov., Carr; best Yorks., Stevens (a novice); best Brit., G. Birch; best Mule, Snow. There was a good attendance; Mr. John Robson judged, and gave every satisfaction. ALFRETON C.B.S.

Annual open N.F. show,, Red Lion Hotel, July 10. As most fanciers around have had rather a disappointing season, entries were scarce, only 45 birds facing the judge, Mr. J. WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Eleventh annual young bird show, Smaller Queen's Hall. Entries exceeded last year's by 10, and this must be attributed to the zeal of the secretary, Mr. G. Griffiths, in whipping up exhibitors. Yorks. and Bord. were chief features of the champ. section, and there were excellent classes of Norwich and Yorks. in novices. Quality all round was very good, although a few of the birds were going "soft" previous to moulting. Mr. J. Robson judged and gave satisfaction.

MRS. J. P. and J. O'H.—Replied to by post.

EFFECT OF DISINFECTANT (E. V.).—I do not think that the use of the disinfectant wash and rinsing the cages afterwards is in the least likely to be the cause of the bird's death from ulceration of the intestines. By the bye, how did you arrive at this diagnosis? I take it you are quite satisfied that it is correct, though it would have been better to have mentioned the symptoms which led you to this conclusion. You will, of course, lose a bird occasionally, even under the most scientific management. It is only in the natural order of things that birds should die some time, and it may be but the merest coincidence that this one died whilst you were in the habit of washing out the cages weekly with the disinfectant. Anyway, so long as you rinse the things well afterwards, you need have no qualms whatever about using either of the fluids you name, even though you used it on the food and water vessels. You should not neglect wiping the wires dry after rinsing to prevent rust or verdigris forming, which might be harmful if the birds pecked it off the wires.

HENS NOT FEEDING (J. F. P.).—If, as you say, the hens you now have come from a good feeding strain, I fail to see the purpose of clearing them all out and "trying to get in touch with a breeder with a good feeding strain." You ought to have that class of material already according to your statement. As they are all first season hens I think you may very reasonably give them another chance next season, though it would be judicious to try to get one or two known good feeders to have in readiness in case of need as foster parents. It is quite too late now to get fresh stock with the idea of breeding with it this year. Indeed, it is now time you began to break up your pairs for the moulting season, which will soon be in full swing. Moult the hens in good large flights where they can get plenty of vigorous exercise, keep them on a plain and wholesome diet through the winter months, aim at having them in good hard condition next spring, put them up for breeding in a bright and pleasant and well ventilated place, but not where they will be exposed to much disturbance, and do not mate until some time about the end of March, and I think it quite likely that these same hens will give a good account of themselves. Begin with the method of treatment given in "Canary Breeding" for ordinary cases, and do not vary it without absolute necessity, and, what is still more important, do not interfere with the birds' domestic affairs if you can possibly avoid it.

STILL WHEEZES (J. F. P., Leyton).—(1) The bird is undoubtedly improving, but now, with the moult so near at hand, it is rather doubtful if the wheezing will quite disappear until the moult is over. See that it is kept from direct draughts, and when the moult gets in full swing keep the bird rather on the warm side. Go on giving the squills mixture every second day in alternate weeks for a month or six weeks, and cease giving the cod liver oil emulsion. Instead of the latter, give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar twice a week, or you may vary this occasionally by substituting a small teaspoonful of egg food, (2) I am no advocate of depriving young Canaries of pure water from the time they are taken away from their parents. I always put on a vessel of pure plain water from the time they are separated, and have yet to find that any ill effect arises from the practice.

SWELLING ON THROAT (Lump).—You should have described the swelling as nearly as you could, as to size and substance—whether hard or soft, its colour, and whether it appeared to contain fluid or solid contents. You ought also to have said what you mean by "sudden appearance," as a large swelling does not as a rule appear all at once. In the absence of more details I can only guess what may be wrong, and the most likely thing that occurs to me is that it is a case of emphysema. This surmise would be strengthened if the bird was in vigorous song at the time the swelling appeared. Try the following treatment for two or three weeks, and if not then well, write again and give the fullest particulars you can. In addition to the usual seed diet, give every third day a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and every second day for a week add to the drinking water six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea. After this give instead six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of gentian every second day for a week or fortnight. If there appears to be an accumulation of air under the skin, you may carefully prick the skin with a clean needle and allow it to pass off.

NO STOPPING THEM (E.M.T.).—(1) Very glad to hear that you are now succeeding so well. As regards your departure from the pure egg yolk for the young for the first day after hatching, I certainly do not quarrel with you for adding a little bread to it from the first, if you think the young do better. The giving of pure yolk is not absolutely essential, and, in fact, depends somewhat upon the character of the hen in any given case. Hope your success will continue. (2) It should be an easy matter to stop the hens nesting again. Take away the cocks when the hens begin to sit now, and do not return them in any case. If the hens lay a casual egg when the young are leaving the nest, or even a full clutch, throw them away, and as soon as the young can be placed on their own put the hens in flight cages, and keep apart from the cocks. The loss of a few stray eggs is better than allowing the hens to attempt nesting again now. (3) The trouble with egg-laying was doubtless the reason of the hen not feeding the young. You should have kept her quite warm for a day or so, and added a pinch of Epsom salts and ten drops of lemon juice to the water to correct the trouble with the soft food. (4) I cannot tell why the hen left the eggs just before they were due to hatch and refused to return to them. It is one of those things for which no sound reason can be assigned. You, however, did the right thing in giving them to the other hen which you had available. (5) It is quite unimportant whether eggs that fail to hatch are removed from the nest. They may serve a useful purpose if left alone until the young are about a week old, especially in the case of very small broods, by preventing the hen sitting too closely on the young.

EYE TROUBLE (Miss E. G. A.).—See that the birds are not exposed to any strong direct draughts. Keep cages and perches as clean as possible; and do not mix up the food and water vessels until the trouble has quite disappeared. Make a decoction by placing six or eight camomile flowers—obtainable from most chemists—in a large teacup, fill up with boiling water, cover over, and allow it to infuse beside the fire for an hour or so. Then strain off the clear liquor, add the bowl of a teaspoonful level full of sulphate of zinc and 30 drops of tincture of opium. Bathe the eyes with a little of this liquor every morning and evening until well, using a little fresh liquor and a fresh dossil of wool for each bird, and burn at once that which has been used. It will also help matters if you add to the drinking water as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and ten drops of lemon juice for two consecutive days in each week, and about every third day give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, in additon to the usual diet.

REMEDY WANTED (Fancier).—(1) What you need much more than a remedy to remove effects is to eliminate the exciting causes of the condition, and thereby prevent the trouble arising. Medicinal treatment, without removing the cause is, as I am frequently pointing out, worse than useless. The hen appears to be suffering from serious bronchial trouble, and it is doubtful if you will now be able to do more than relieve her. The fact that tho cock was beginning to show similar symptoms was doubtless due to his being exposed to the same influences, and not to his being caged with the hen. See that the birds are kept in a fairly equable temperature, and quite free from direct draughts, and do not hang them high up near the ceiling, near or over burning lights in the evenings, nor where they will be exposed to sudden extremes of temperature. Then you may try the following treatment with some chance of success. In addition to the usual seed diet, give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled with maw seed, every third day. On the intervening days give a little green food, or any of the wild seeds that are now so abundant. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and after this give instead five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia, and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a fortnight, then omit it for a week, and then resume, and give it for another fortnight. (2) The cock is not likely to resume singing now until after the moult, but will probably do so soon after, without any special treatment.

EGG HATCHED UNDER CANARY (Charlie's Aunt).—You did not send your name and address in accordance with our rules. Will you please send these on a postcard? The bird you have hatched out under your Canary and succeeded in rearing is a young Greenfinch. When he moults next month he will lose the peculiar markings and show the adult plumage of the species. The wings will remain as they are now. The bird will only be of value as a Canary-reared Greenfinch suitable for Hybrid production. For this purpose, if it should turn out to be a hen, so much the better. The cock Greenfinch is a rather pleasing vocalist. The song is somewhat mellow, but generally spoilt by a long drawn out "zee" at the end.

MULE NOT SINGING (W. Pengelly).—Your bird evidently requires attention. You should catch him and trim his nails with a sharp pair of scissors. Hold the bird's foot up to the light, and you will see a vein running down the nail; trim not quite so short as this, or the foot will bleed. Then return him to a thoroughly new or clean cage, and hang in a different position. I expect the one he is in is infested with insects. Feed the bird as you are now doing, with just a little extra hemp, and a spoonful of egg food twice a week. It is possible he will have his proper moult now, so you will not get any song out of him until he is quite through. Put a small teaspoonful of Chemical Food in his drinking water (boiled water) for three days, then miss three and repeat. Give all the wild seed you can collect.

SEX OF CHAFFINCH (M. Walker).—Your bird is certainly not a cock Chaffinch. This bird has a ruddy breast, blue crown to the head, and is really a bright cheerful looking bird. In addition to this, had your bird been a cock he would have been singing during the spring and early summer.

MOULTING A ROBIN ("Alpha").—Your Robin will go into moult shortly, and requires at that period a little more generous treatment, particularly in the matter of insect food. Beyond this I think your general treatment is quite good enough. He likes a pinch of Canary seed occasionally, and also fruit. These you should add to his bill of fare. Supply the bath regularly; he will take to it again presently. (2) You could clip one wing of your Magpie, and no doubt by the time he moults and it grows again he will have settled down. If you leave his cage door open, with some food always in it, he will return to feed, and possibly roost there.

NIGHTINGALE AND BLACKCAP (H. Martin).—It is just possible your bird has had a slight mishap whilst bathing, and so is now somewhat shy. I gather from your letter that you have a pool of water in your aviary; if so, this should be filled up for a time with stones, leaving only very small pools of water. When the bird takes to bathing again the stones could be removed gradually, so as to allow more room for him. If you can get him to bathe regularly, it will do him more good than any medicine. Vary his food with a good brand of insectile mixture, with scraped raw carrot, new ones can be obtained now. (2) The cause of your Blackcap losing the feathers round the neck is probably bird lice, not red mite. If he recovers his health and bathes regularly he may lose them in the outside aviary. Make the same alteration in his food as advised for the 'Gale, but be extra liberal with fruit. Give ripe currants, bananas, raspberries, pears, etc., as they come in season. There is no better food than these for the Blackcap. In a wild state he almost lives on fruit during the summer and autumn, and you cannot do better than imitate nature as near as possible.

BRAMBLEFINCH WITH WEAK CLAW (J.L.P.).—A weak hind claw is unfortunately far too common among cage birds, and in a good many cases it is impossible of cure. But there is always hope for young birds. Remove your present perches, and replace them with thin ones, not thicker than a stout lead pencil; this will frequently effect a cure. Catch the bird and massage the claw between the finger and thumb, just greasing it slightly with vaseline; this should be done twice a day if possible. Keep the perches rather low, look after his general health, and let him bathe frequently.

COLOUR-FEEDING BRITISH BIRD (I. Pratton).—You should commence to colour-feed your bird at once; it is a mistake to wait until the moult has started. The first sign of the moult is a few loose feathers on the floor of the cage, and a roughness in plumage. The new feathers first appear on each side of the breast. If you do not commence to give the colour before this, the bird will have a patchy appearance when he is finished.

HEN GOLDFINCH FOR BREEDING (A. King).—A breeding hen Goldfinch will pair with a cock Canary, but this is not the usual way of producing Goldfinch Mules. The reason is that the hen Goldfinch is not to be relied upon to incubate and rear the young. It always appears to me that a hen British bird is wasted when paired with a cock Canary. She should be mated to a cock British, to produce rarer Hybrids. A good mate for your Goldie would be a Linnet or Greenfinch. I fear it would be too late to do anything this season unless the hen was anxious to go to nest, and you could put in a mate for her at once. (2) An ordinary cock Canary would cost about 10s.

TREATMENT OF GOLDFINCH MULE (Anxious).—The feathers probably will not grow again until the bird has moulted; you could assist them by applying just a smear of vaseline or fresh lard. I am glad the treatment proved so far successful; you had better discontinue the salts, anyway for the present. The indisposition would be a premonitory symptom of the moult, and you should be careful that he does not take cold. I would advise you to moult him indoors, in a light, airy room, without a fire. The mixed seed you send is quite a good sample. In addition to this give just a little egg food and a pinch of maw seed three times a week. I fear the bird has had a fright, and possibly hurt the foot. You had better bathe it in a solution of boracic acid (a teaspoonful to a cup of warm water). Perhaps you have been rather overdoing the salts, and he has consequently got a bit low in condition. Anyway, your treatment now should lean rather to a generous one, so as to assist him through the moult.

BULLFINCHES NOT NESTING (Novice).—Although the Bullfinch hen is generally very prolific, it is by no means unusual for one to refuse to go to nest. Treatment has something to do with this, so does the age of the bird. She may be old and played out, or quite young, and missing her first season, as many birds do, even in a wild condition. The fact of your having two birds not nesting makes me inclined to think your treatment at fault. For breeding purposes, birds do not require to be fat; healthy condition is the main factor. The laying hen is frequently in poor condition although healthy. The fact of your purchasing the birds proves nothing; they may not have nested with their former owners. I would advise you to somewhat reduce fat-forming food; feed liberally on seeding wild plants, and a little soaked seeds occasionally. The best food of all you can give them now is plants smothered with green fly; these parasites you can find in plenty on weeds struggling for existence along crowded hedgerows and under leafy trees. I would advise you in future to rely more upon wild caught hens, procured direct from the catcher, or from a dealer having a regular supply. Buy in the autumn.

MULE BREEDING WITH GOLDFINCH (F.E.M.).—I am glad to hear you have done well with your Linnet and Canary, but there is no reason why you should have not done equally as well with the Goldie. The methods of management are practically the same, excepting that you cannot, as a rule, trust the Goldfinch with the eggs. He should be shut off by himself overnight when the hen is expected to lay. Your Finches should be in breeding trim by now, and if the hens go to nest you may expect fertile eggs. A clear beak in the Finch is not absolutely necessary to success. I have known them to fertilise eggs when they have had quite a distinct mark on it, but as a rule Hybrid breeders look for a clear beak before mating. Your hens must hurry up if they are going to do anything this season. Some are already in moult. Give them all a little egg-food and maw seed daily.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

GREY PARROT (Preswylfa).—(1) Unless there is indigestion, the regurgitation to which you refer is quite natural, and the habit of taking your finger and regurgitating is equivalent to one Parrot feeding another, and a mark of affection towards yourself. So long as you make it clear to the children what they must not give, their giving it wholesome tit-bits at times will not be to its detriment. (2) Cover round the sides of the cage by all means, but leave a portion of the top open for ventilation. The grinding of the beak is again quite natural, but it is also a sign of indigestion—if the latter, it would occur at intervals during the whole day. (3) In a state of nature birds, except those of nocturnal habits, sleep during the hours of darkness and also take a siesta about or just after noon, and in captivity their procedure is about the same. (4) I should say the Nutshell on the Grey Parrot and "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit," which our manager would send you post free for 7d., and reading the query columns would meet your needs. Acute cases of malignant diseases must be dealt with individually, but if a bird is suddenly taken ill acutely, put it in really hot quarters and send in a query at once. A bird that is not subjected to a rapidly changing temperature, kept out of draught, wholesomely fed, and not allowed to become constipated should only suffer from slight ailments, such as are covered in our Nutshell booklet. A teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water occasionally should suffice to keep the bowels in good order.

FOR AVIARY CAGE (J. J. P.).—About eighteen birds would be sufficient to put in your cage, merely as a collection of birds, but if you wish to make any attempt at breeding then only put in three pairs. The brightest in plumage as a rule rank as poor songsters. The following should be should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1½); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.) "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each); No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Avadavats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

pleasing; the first half-dozen would be for song, the others principally for gay plumage:—Cocks only of Alario Finch, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Cape Canary, St. Helena Seedeater; also pairs each of Cordon Bleus, Firefinches, Gold-breasted Waxbills, Silverbills, Orange-cheek Waxbills, Avadavats, and Common Waxbills. You could put in all the above as you are able to obtain them. Furnish the cage with twiggy branches all over the back and one end; hang up behind the branches half a dozen or more small rush nests for the Waxbills to sleep in. As regards the aviary outside your window, you would have to proceed on the same lines, as small greenhouses are so fixed. You must first firmly secure several brackets to the wall, and on these nail the floor. I should suggest extending it twelve inches beyond the window on each side; these recesses would make good shelters for the birds. On the flooring you would erect your aviary. The roof, ends and back to consist of wood and glass, the portions of roof and back facing the window to be glass covered with half-inch mesh wire netting on the inside, the other portions to be matchboarding. The front of aviary facing the window (almost against it) must be wire netting, containing one large door, to enable you to get at all parts easily for furnishing and spring cleaning, and a smaller door for general attendance—such as cleaning the floor and putting in food. The two side recesses be lined all round with twiggy branches and furnished with rush nests. Two dead bushes in pots could stand in the centre part near the back glass.

FEMALE PARROTS AS TALKERS (W. H.).—My experience has been with the general run of the more loquacious species of Parrots that the females talk almost as freely (if not quite) as the males. Some species of Amazons are more talkative than others, and of this group I place the Blue-fronted first; of this species I have come across several talented females, but of the majority of Parrots kept their owners do not know their sex.

SHY TALKER (C.A.M.).—It is the individualism of one particular bird, for which there is no accounting. Why not vary the programme? Let someone else do the general feeding and cleaning, and confine yourself to giving it tit-bits, fondling, etc. Many thanks for appreciative remarks.

WHAT PARRAKEET? (J. P.).—So far as it is possible to be definite, apart from a drawing, your birds are Orange-flanked Parrakeets, with a value at the present time of from 50s. to 60s., according to condition. Their main dietary should consist of canary seed, white millet, and a few oats, green food and fruit if they will take it; also grit (not sand), cuttlebone and water. Grit should be given cautiously at first, if they have been deprived of it for some time—i.e., gradually accustom them to it by giving them only a pinch, once a day at first, then twice a day and so on, gradually increasing the quantity, ultimately leaving a supply in the cage continuously.

BUDGERIGAR WITH WEAK FEET (Topsy).—Give it three drops of castor oil direct to the beak, then a few hours later give it the same quantity of cod liver oil emulsion. Supply it with canary and white millet seed, millet spray, and as much seeding and flowering grass as it will eat. Grit, cuttlebone, and water must be continually in the cage. If the bird eats heartily of its seed, etc., and you persevere with the C.L.O. emulsion (this can be given twice daily when you are not giving the castor oil), the bird may regain the use of its legs. Lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. After the first dose of castor oil only give it as required to keep the bowels moving quite freely, but not watery loose. If there is no improvement in two or three weeks it will be best to painlessly destroy it.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if no fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Blue Pigeon.—Encephalitis, inflammation of the brain; resulting from this there was a collection of fluid in the cranial cavity causing pressure upon the important motor centres producing paralysis, inability to swallow, and occasional fits. Its origin is traumatic. The bird was very healthy, and contained quite a quantity of fat.

W. Kay.—Septic Fever.

Miss Merritt.—Death occurred from bronchitis. Its throat was very much inflamed and sore, causing difficulty in swallowing. There is no doubt it originated in this position, and later extended to the bronchial tubes.

Miss Holland.—Enteritis following fatty degeneration of the liver.

Avian.—Death occurred from peritonitis arising from septic infection from the oviduct. The hen was otherwise in excellent health.

D.G.—Rupture of a blood vessel on the lungs. The hæmorrhage was extensive, and death must have occurred quickly. Fright or excitement must have been the cause.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

S. T. Willis.—You will find in our Nutshell No. 26, "The Larger Insectivorous Birds," 2½d. post free, from this office, or 2d. from your local newsagent or bird-dealer, instructions for the breeding of mealworms given at greater length than we could possibly give them in this column, and the booklet would also be useful to you for its full instructions as to the proper feeding and keeping of insectivorous birds.

C. V. Liddaman.—You may enter your birds at any open show without being a member of any society, but most societies hold shows confined to their members, these shows being quite separate from the annual open shows (you will see reports of members' shows every week in our columns). In any case, you will, of course, have to take or send your birds to the show in which you enter them. Societies near to your address are: Kensington and St. Quintin's Park F. and F.S., sec., A. J. Foy, 235, Harrow Road; Ealing and Hanwell F.S., sec., R. Bamber, 78, Whitestile Road, Brentford; West London F.A., sec., J. W. Dewhurst, 52, North End Road, W. Kensington. You may obtain particulars of membership and book of fixtures from either of these secs. on application, or you will find a full list of London societies in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1915. You would do well to visit any of the young bird shows you see announced in our "Club and Society Notices" column, and there you will see exactly how the birds are staged, and could gather useful particulars from any of the officials present.

Dereham.—The bird which frequents your garden is either a hen Blackbird, or a young cock in immature plumage. The hen is always of a blackish brown in colour, and young birds of both sexes resemble her in colour of plumage, but the young cocks gradually become darker and acquire a yellow beak.

W. A. Williams.—The seed head you send is from the Yellow Goats' Beard, known as "Jack, go to bed at noon." The flowers close up each day at noon, hence the popular name.
